"I believe I can maintain segregation in Louisiana for the four years I am governor," said Long, who will be serving his third term. "I have just enough confidence I can do as much toward handling the situation. I don't believe we are going to maintain it dogging it and raising hell."

The Catholic newspaper also said excommunication may apply to those who worked for and voted for measures to enforce parochial school segregation and those who sought the aid of civil authorities to put the laws into effect.

Excommunication is the severest punishment meted out by the Catholic church. The excommunicated person is barred from receiving the sacraments of the church, including communion and the last rites.

Ordered by Archbishop

"The proposed laws, in effect, would be an entering wedge for the control of Catholic education by political leaders," the newspaper said. They would "certainly impede the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction," it continued.

"If the laws were put into effect, automatic excommunication would be incurred by those who worked for and voted for their passage and by those who appeal to lay authorities for their application, such as persons who besought sheriffs, chiefs of police, or courts to put provisions of the laws into effect."

The Rev. Carl Schutten, editor in chief, said the editorial "was written and included on specific instructions of the archbishop, who is president of Catholic Action." M. F. Everett, editor, whose byline appears on the editorial, said he wrote it and the archbishop "was apprised of it."

U. S. Enters Court Case

Washington, Feb. 24 (AP)—The justice department, in its first set to back up the Supreme court desegregation ruling for public schools, will oppose an effort by segregationists to dissolve a federal injunction which prohibits them from interfering with racially integrated schools at Hoxie, Ark.

The government will file as a "friend of the court" brief with the United States Circuit Court of Appeals at St. Louis next month, said G. Frederick Mullen, justice department public relations director.

Three segregation groups have asked the Circuit court to overrule United States District Judge Albert L. Reeves, who enjoined them early this year from interfering with operation of the integrated schools.

Editor's Home Bombed

Tavares, Fla., Feb. 24 (AP)—Mrs. Mabel Norris, Mount Dora woman newspaper editor who favors integration, told a grand jury today her home had been bombed twice this week.

Mrs. Norris told newsmen after she appeared before the jury that one bomb exploded in her yard Tuesday night; the other last night when no one was home. Neighbors said fragments picked up at the scene apparently were of a war hand grenade. Mrs. Norris has been active and outspoken in anti-segregation matters.

Negroes Going North

Athens, Ga., Feb. 24 (AP)—Georgia editors were told today that while the segregation issue has been drawing so much attention, there has been a diffusion of the minority race in the south.

Don Shoemaker, director of the Southern Education Reporting service, told the Georgia Press institute, "The Negro population of our region increased only about 1.5 per cent from 1940 to 1950 while outside the south it increased some 56 per cent."

Archbishop Rummel And The Devil

It is remarkable how many great Christian Churchmen in America seem to be able to reconcile the cruel system of racial segregation with their own particular brand of Christianity. It is odd that God should have so many hypocrites working on His side of the street. Of course, God is not being fooled and, to put it bluntly, neither are we.

It is refreshing no end, therefore, to greet a gentleman of cloth a true representative of Christ on earth, who is willing to live up to the precepts of his faith and practice what he preaches. We have reference, of course, to Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel of New Orleans.

Last week Archbishop Rummel, in a pastoral letter read in all the churches of his diocese, declared flatly that racial segregation was "morally wrong and sinful." Many New Orleans Catholics were distressed at this intelligence. Some were downright angry about it.

Nevertheless, it appears that Archbishop Rummel is going forward with plans to integrate the Catholic schools of New Orleans. He recognizes that there are many grave problems to be resolved and that integration will not be easy. He is going ahead anyway.

The Archbishop stated in his letter that segregation is "morally wrong and sinful because it is denial of the unity and solidarity of the human race as conceived by the God in the creation of man in Adam and Eve."

The Fatherhood of God is an essential, basic tenet of the Christian faith. So it would appear, very logically too, that to believe in the Fatherhood of God, would be to believe also in the brotherhood of man. Here is where the Devil enters the picture.

Strangely enough, jim crow Christians lose their minds and their faith when one of the brothers turns up colored. Perhaps the Devil has done his work too well. So far, at least, the Devil is in the saddle in Dixie and God's only hope lies with men like Archbishop Rummel.

In recent years the Catholic Church has taken the leadership in true Christian thought and action in the race relations field. Archbishop Rummel and his colleagues in the Catholic Church deserve the support and commendation of all good Americans of all faiths.

N.O.I.M.A. SLAPS AT SEGREGATION

Says It Runs Counter to Moral Laws
Sun. 3-18-56

The New Orleans Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, in a statement Saturday, declared that segregation is an evident evil that runs counter to the moral laws of God and is destroying the integrity of American democracy.

New Orleans,

The statement, in the form of a resolution, was signed by Dr. P. W. Raphael, chairman; Rev. Nicholas Hood, Central Congregational church; Rev. Dave Dennis, Sixth Union Baptist church; Rev. John B. Morris, First Free Mission Baptist church, and Rev. A. L. Davis, alliance president.

Segregation retards economic progress and creates a paralyzing influence of inferiority, read the resolution. P. 13

The N. O. I. M. A. praised the decision of the US supreme court which abolished segregation in public schools.

A request was made of lawmakers and leaders of the community to abide by both the letter and the spirit of the US supreme court concerning the practices of segregation.

The alliance reported that it was opposed to segregation in any form, and condemned the interposition resolution which is being favored by most of the leaders of Southern states.

Rev. Davis will be the principal speaker Sunday at 3 p. m. at a mass meeting conducted at Union Bethel African Methodist Episcopal church, 2321 Thalia. Rev. Davis replaces Bishop H. Thomas Primm, presiding bishop, Eighth Episcopal District, African Methodist Episcopal church, who was called from the city on business. The public is invited, stated Davis.

Morrison Points to Steps Taken in New Orleans

Sun. 1-1-56

By B. L. KREBS

(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

WINNSBORO, La., Dec. 31—Candidates in the governor's race who are making the most noise about the segregation issue are the ones mostly to blame for bringing it on, Mayor deLesseps S. Morrison charged in a series of campaign speeches in Northeast Louisiana Saturday. P. 10

"If equal facilities had been provided for the Negroes, as was supposed to be done," said Morrison, "the pressures would not have been generated which brought about the recent Supreme Court decision precipitating the present crisis.

"If state officials had gone about the business of providing equal facilities like we have in New Orleans this wouldn't have happened. Instead of burying our head in the sand like an ostrich, we started providing equal facilities 10 years ago, the only fair basis on which segregation can be maintained."

Accompanied by Lt. Gov. C. E. Barham, candidate for re-election on his ticket, Morrison spoke at Farmerville, the home-town of gubernatorial candidate Fred L. Preaus; at Bastrop, Rayville, and here, and the itinerary called also for speeches at Gilbert, Wisner, Sicily Island and Ferriday.

Barham, in his Bastrop talk, assailed Gov. Robert F. Kennor for what he charged was a violation of a pledge by Kennon four years ago not to seek to name his successor.

"The independent voters are going to pick the next governor," said Barham. "With voting machines and civil service, they are now in the saddle and they don't like to be told what to do."

Morrison asked those voters of Union parish who are not going to support Preaus to cast a ballot for him.

Bringing up the so-called "religious issue," Morrison said he had heard it stated at least a hundred times that he was a competent public official but that he can't be elected governor because he's a Catholic.

"I was born a Catholic," said Morrison, "and I learned religion from my mother. Most of you probably learned your religion the same way. Billy Graham, the great Baptist leader, in a series of meetings in New Orleans last year didn't urge people to join the Baptist church; he urged them to return to their own church, whatever it was, and be a good member of it."

Any man who harbors religious prejudice, said Morrison, would not be fit to be governor of Louisiana because the man in that office is governor of all the people, regardless of creed or race.

PREAUS TO BACK RACE SEPARATION

Candidate Pledges Use of Police Powers

Mon. 1-2-56

Gubernatorial candidate Fred T. Preaus indicated in New Orleans Sunday that should he be elected governor he would turn to the state's police powers to enforce segregation. P. 14

He expressed confidence that those police powers of the state would not be abridged by the federal government.

Appearing over WDSU-TV on a program presented by the bureau of governmental research, the Farmerville businessman said of the supreme court decision on segregation, "I consider it only a temporary interpretation."

He said he knew of no law which would support the decision.

Denies Any Deal

In answer to questions from a panel, Preaus denied any "deal" with Jefferson parish Sheriff Frank Clancy, stating only that Clany has said he hoped Preaus would be as "considerate of Jefferson parish in the future as he has in the past."

"If that's a deal," said the candidate, "then we've made a deal with everybody in Louisiana."

On the subject of law enforcement, he said he thought candidate Francis C. Grevemberg had done a "good job" as state police superintendent. Asked whether he would appoint Grevemberg as state police chief should he (Preaus) win, Preaus answered only that he would not deal with any opponent "in this part of the campaign."

Prefers Democrat

Switching to the national presidential campaign, Preaus said: "I would like to see a good Democrat nominated whose platform would be in the best interests of this state."

But he said he was opposed to Adlai Stevenson's attitude on tidelands legislation. He said that attitude calls for the federal government to seize the tidelands oil fields.

"I'm a Democrat," said the candidate, "a good Democrat, but I still put my country first."

Catholics Shout Defiance On Race Issue

Daily World

Sat. 2-4-56

Atlanta, Ga.

NEW ORLEANS — (ANP) — Rabig pro-segregationists shouted abuse and defiance on Archbishop Joseph Rummel here Monday night and accused the Catholic church of "pushing Negroes on us." P. 7

At a tumultous meeting of the Council of Catholic School Cooperative Clubs, made up of president and past presidents of the Catholic school parents clubs in the area, the archbishop was called a Yankee because of archdiocesan intergration plans.

One woman charged that the church and the north are "the same thing," when the Rt. Rev. Henry Bezou superintendent of archdiocesan school, said it made no difference where the archbishop came from since intergration was a church matter.

(Archbishop Rummel was born in Baden, Germany, ordained in Rome in 1903, and served parishes in Yorkville, Kingston and Harlem, N. Y. He was bishop of Omaha, Neb. before moving up to archbishop of New Orleans in 1935).

Some of the parents accused the archbishop of "not being fair to white people"; others of "trying to shove intergration down our throats."

Applause greeted an unidentified man who asked! "Why does the church insist on pushing Negroes on us?"

New Orleans is the only city in the south where more children attend parochial than public schools.

Msgr. Charles Plauche, chancellor of the New Orleans Archdiocese, told newsmen Sunday that racial intergration may come in Roman Catholic schools here this year.

His remarks came following a panel discussion at Ursilino Academy on integration, a topic that split up a meeting of the Parents Club at Jesuit high school two weeks ago and is becoming a hotter issue every day.

Msgr. Paluche said the timing of the intergration was under study and "no definite decision has been made." He said, however, "it's very possible that it may come this year."

The chancellor said the church had tolerated segregation through the ages because "often when you're working for an ideal that's right, you are tolerating a lot that isn't right along the way."

About 27 percent of New Orleans' Catholic school children are Negroes.

They have been attending separate schools.

Louisiana Man To Move To California

Sun. 2-5-56

COUSHATTA, La., Feb. 4. — (AP) — Henry Vickers, 55-year-old Negro plumber and electrician, plans to leave Louisiana after reporting threats against his life because of political activity. P. 7

Vickers told newsmen Saturday he had received anonymous letters and telephone calls. In one letter was a newspaper clipping of a story on the shooting of a Negro in Mississippi. He said a note on it said "The same thing is going to happen to you."

Memphis, Tenn.

His political activity had centered on last month's race for sheriff and the state Legislature. He said he had decided to move, possibly to California, for his family's safety. He plans to leave next month, he said.

The ad by Henry Vickers, 55-year-old plumber and electrician, appeared in the weekly Coushatta Citizen.

New Orleans

He told newsmen he had received a newspaper clipping of a story concerning the shooting of a Negro in Mississippi. At the bottom, he said, was the pencilled note, "The same thing is going to happen to you."

La.

Vickers said an anonymous telephone caller had told him, "Henry, you are going to die."

Vickers said the FBI has contacted him about the threats and Red River Parish Sheriff Kirwin Brown said the FBI was checking to see if Vickers' civil rights had been violated. The FBI office in Shreveport declined comment.

Vickers' political activities were centered in races for sheriff and the state Legislature. He said the letters and telephone calls began shortly before the Jan. 17 Democratic primary and lasted until a few days ago. They cautioned him to quit politics or leave.

Vickers, who said he probably will go to California, told newsmen he is not connected with the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

He said his decision to move was based on his family's safety.

The one-fourth page advertisement thanked Coushatta citizens for the benefits the town in northwest Louisiana had afforded him and said, "I am more in its debt than I can ever repay."

Band quits Mardi Gras in slap at race issue

Afro-American Sat. 2-11-56 P. Baltimore, Md

LONG BEACH, Cal. — Racial bans in New Orleans have deprived the annual Mardi Gras celebration there of one of the nation's finest young bands.

The crack Long Beach Youth Band last week withdrew from the Mardi Gras parade beacuse the aggregation's two colored musicians will not be permitted to participate.

Gordon Carmen, director of the band, after a conference with Mayor George M. Vermillion, said:

"If all our band members can't participate in the parade, then none of us will. It's a matter of American principle."

The 39-piece band was one of several invited to take part in the parade February 14.

"An official who declined to fully identify himself over the telephone said that the colored members could attend the Mardi Gras if they wanted to and could participate in another parade sponsored by a Zulu organization," Carmen said.

The California officials made it clear that they had no intention of so segregating their youngsters.

"We have no Zulus in our group," Carmen commented, "although they would be welcome if they could qualify as musicians. Ability is all we are interested in."

Cleric Scores Race Barirers In Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 19 (AP) — Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel in a strongly worded pastoral letter today denounced racial segregation as "morally wrong and sinful" and gave clear indication he intends to integrate New Orleans parochial schools.

Birmingham, Ala.

His letter was read at all Masses in all churches throughout the archdiocese, largest in the Deep South with a Catholic population of 524,157. About 25 per cent are Negroes.

It was the first time New Orleans catholics heard integration plans discussed in a public letter from the archbishop. The reading at most churches commanded rapt attention.

Ala. 2-20-56

Archdiocesan spokesmen previously have announced that plans are under way to integrate the Catholic schools sometime after 1956, but this was the archbishop's first public denunciation of segregation as a sin.

The New Orleans parochial school system is the state's largest single school unit. New Orleans is one of the few cities in the country where more children attend parochial than public schools.

Archbishop Rummel did not say when integration would come but pleaded "that the decision when made will be accepted in the spirit of Christian charity and justice.

"This is a problem which should be worked out not in an atmosphere of wranging or contention or discord or hatred but in a spirit of conciliation and with a desire to achieve peace through justice and charity."

He said the plans are still under study.

The New Orleans public school system is already under U.S. District Court order to begin carrying out the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court decision ending public school segregation.

The court order came Wednesday after a special three-man federal court declared all Louisiana school segregation laws unconstitutional.

More than 50 per cent of the South's Catholics live in Louisiana. But the archbishop's letter had no effect on Louisiana's other two dioceses, Lafayette and Alexandria.

In his letter, the German-born archbishop said racial segregation "is morally wrong and sinful because it is a denial of the unity and solidarity of the human race as conceived by God in the creation of man in Adam and Eve."

New Orleans Embroiled In Racial Fight

World P. 6 Sat. 3-9-56

Birmingham, Ala.

NEW ORLEANS — (ANP) — For the first time in New Orleans since 1920, a period of 36 years — the first thing that looked like the Klu Klux Klan appeared in the Crescent City. A huge cross was burned on Canal and Jefferson Davis Parkway at the foot of the statue of Jefferson Davis, Confederate States leader. Inscribed on the cross was the following phrase: "Let us Preserve White Children from the Black Plague."

Eyewitnesses say they saw three very young lads get out of an auto and set up the cross, afterwards lighting it and quickly fleeing away. No real commotion was raised in the city about the matter. New Orleans has been rather free of Klu Klux Klan influence due to the great number of Catholics here.

A school board member, Emile Wagner, also has caused some commotion by his attitude in the matter of a meeting at Lovola last Sunday at which the principal address was given by Hulan Jack, Negro borough president Manhattan. Wagner, who has been active in organization of White Citizens' Councils says Loyola never should have had Jack to speak as Jack was "known to run with communists and belonged to a number of Communist organizations."

Wagner is an alumnus of Loyola and he objected to the holding of the interracial meet by the school. No segregation occurred at the meet which was the sixth annual gathering of its kind.

La. Medics Fail To See 'Harm' In Integration

Defender P. 4 Sat 5-26-56

Chicago Ill.

NEW ORLEANS — Four out of five New Orleans psychiatrists and neurologists participating in a poll thought racial school integration would be either beneficial or of little effect upon the children.

The poll was conducted by the Medical Advisory Committee of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., in cooperation with a committee of the New Orleans Medical Association.

Fifty-six questionnaires were mailed to New Orleans psychiatrists and neurologists: 21 replies weree received. The key question was:

"From a professional point of view, how would you characterize the psychiatrict effect of racially integrated schools on white and Negro children?"

17 DOCTORS

Seventeen doctors — 81 percent of those replying — thought integration would be either beneficial or would have little effect. Ten termed it beneficial; of the seven believing it of little effect, three qualified their answers with "in the long run."

Four considered there were harmful possibilities in the ending of segregation. Two of those thought both races would suffer; one believed that whites would be harmed while Negroes would benefit.

The poll was undertaken following the filing in the Orleans parish school case of affidavits from eight physicians and three psychiatrists intended to show that intgration would confront the community with a health hazard and would be "psychiatrically traumatizing to the children of both races."

MAKE COMMENTS

Following are some of the comments appended to the questionnaires by the New Orleans specialists. In the words of one doctor:

"There can be little question of the detrimental effect on the psychic development of any discriminated-against group by a system which teaches them that they are inferior. The psychic effect on master groups is equally, but more subtly, detrimental."

Another doctor envisaged the emotional transitition that will take place with the coming of integration:

"Initially there is likely to be some reserve and suspiciousness on the part of both races. Especially in the upper grades the children will first try to remain separate and associate only with their own color. Some, inflamed by their elders, may become involved in fighting.

GENERAL ACCEPTANCE

"Gradually it can be expected that the children will come to accept the individuals of the other race according to each one's worth as a human being. The over-all effect on mental health should be salutory."

Among those medical men who thought that integration would have little effect "in the long run," the reservations expressed doubts about adult behavior in the situation.

A doctor who considered that integration would be harmful to both races qualified his answer by adding "under present setting."

The one respondent who believed that Negroes would benefit and whites lose, added this comment: "Probable lessening of health standards or levels for white race."

MOST COMPREHENSIVE

The most comprehensive analysis of the dispute was appended by one psychiatrist:

"The fears that any mixture of the races will lead to increases of disease, significant lowering of intelligence, or psychiatric difficulties in either race are, to my view, unfounded.

"These seem to be rationalizations to attempt to show just cause why the status quo should be maintained, and to seem to give a scientific medical basis for views which otherwise would have to be termed biased, undemocratic and un-christian."

Griffin Sees Bolt Peril in Integration

Constitution Fri. 5-18-56 Atlanta Ga.

NEW ORLEANS, May 17 (AP)—Gov. Marvin Griffin of Georgia here to address a citizens council rally, said today the South would bolt the Democratic Party "if it tries to ram integration down our throats."

P. 10

He told a press conference he felt Southerners would support a third party movement if other Democrats "don't realize our position on segregation and civil rights."

Griffin and Sen. Eastland (D-Miss) were featured speakers for tonight's prosegregation rally.

Griffin told the rally Thursday night that the United States Supreme Court—not the people of the South—is flouting the "law of the land."

"COURT FLOUTS LAW"

In the speech at the municipal auditorium, Griffin said:

"It cannot be said that the people of the South have defied the court, when it is the court, itself, which acts unconstitutionally, and the states and their people refuse to recognize a ruling which is clearly an unlawful usurpation of authority by the federal judiciary. It is the court which flouts the law of the land, not the states nor their people."

The governor said Southern people who refuse to accept the court's anti-segregation decisions are acting according to the provisions of the U.S. Constitution in their resistance. They are following the law, he asserted.

"JOIN WITH GEORGIA"

Griffin appealed to other Southern states to join Georgia in declaring the court's decision null and ending the "tyranny" of the court.

The issue today is the same as it was almost 100 years ago when the people of Louisiana and Georgia fought side by side for the causes they thought were right, Griffin went on.

The governor contended the school segregation decision is "an effort to bring about by naked force alone the amalgamation of race and the destruction of our very form of government." He called this "anarchy" by the court.

"We don't have a totalitarian form of government in this country," Griffin stated, as he pointed to the powers reserved to the states by the 10th Amendment. "We don't want one."

FIVE BILLS PASS ON SEGREGATION

Times Picayune New Orleans, La. Tues. 6-12-56

Senate Quickly Approves House Measures

(The Times-Picayune Capital Bureau)

BATON ROUGE, La., June 11 —House bills 434 through 438—loaded with keep-segregation intent — moved quickly through final passage in the Senate without debate Monday.

With 31 representatives and senators listed as co-sponsors of all five measures, the bill was guided over an effortless course in the Senate by W. M. Rainach, Bienville-Claiborne district, head of the Louisiana Association of Citizens Councils.

The first of the five-bill package is in the form of a constitutional amendment to be voted on in November. It would withdraw the consent of the state to be sued in certain instances.

Though not referring directly to segregation, sponsors have clearly indicated withdrawals of consent to sue is aimed at staving off attempts to make the state enforce integration in the public parks, playgrounds and other facilities.

Specifically Exempted

Specifically exempted from state consent to be sued are: state parks commission; recreation and park commission for East Baton Rouge parish; all recreation districts created under section 14 (D-4) of article 19 of the constitution; any governmental agency, from local through state, operating parks and other recreational facilities; the state board of education; the LSU board of supervisors; the parish school boards of each parish, and the school boards of the cities of Monroe, Lake Charles and Bogalusa, the only three cities in the state having municipal school systems.

Here is what the other four measures, effective 20 days after the conclusion of the legislative session if they get the governor's signature, are meant to do:

House bill 435—Separate the races at public parks, recreation centers, playgrounds, community centers and other such facilities at which facilities for swimming, dancing, golfing, skating or other recreational activities are conducted.

Public Transport

House bill 436—Require public transportation systems to provide separate waiting room and reception room facilities for white intra-state passengers; require separate facilities for Negro and intra-state passengers.

House bill 437—Require a certificate of "eligibility and good moral character" from the parish graduate's or municipal superintendent of education and the principal of the graduate' high school for entry into "any publicly financed institution of higher learning of this state."

House bill 438 — Eliminate compulsory school attendance within "any public school system and or private day school wherein integration of the races has been ordered by any judicial decree or othe rauthority."

In introducing these bills, Rainach remarked, "We'll be in this fight (to stave off integration) for several years to come . . . which ever side gets the public of the United States on its side will win out."

Each of the five bills whipped through without opposition. The vote on each measure:

House bill 434—Passed 37-0. Not voting were Sens. Theodore M. Hickey, Orleans district and Frank M. Edwards, Livingston-Et. Helena-Tangipahoa.

House bill 435—Passed 36-0. Not voting were Sens. Clifton Gaspard, St. Mary-Vermilion; Hickey, Edwards.

House bill 436 — Passed 36-0. Not voting were Sens. John J. Petre, Orleans; Hickey, Edwards.

House bill 437 — Passed 36-0. Not voting, Petre, Hickey, Edwards.

House bill 438 — Passed 36-0. Not voting were Hickey, Edwards and Arsene L. Stewart, Allen - Beauregard - Calcasieu - Cameron-Jefferson Davis.

Pro-Seg Leaders Crack Hate Whip On Legislators

Times-Picayune, New Orleans, Sat. 6-9-56

During the past week the Louisiana Legislature appeared to be manipulated like so many puppets in their disgusting, appalling and arrogant display of defiance to the U. S. Supreme Court and racial hatred of the Negro by flooding the Legislative hopper with bills literally designed to enslave spiritually and physically the mind and soul of the patient, law abiding Negro community of this state. Thought to be pulling the strings were State Sen. Willie Rainach with Leander Perez in the background as technical director. Both are important figures in the White Citizen's Council movement which has the state in a near panic over its rabid promotion of white supremacy and pro-segregation sympathies. Al Capone and his thugs in their wildest heyday never caused so much fear among decent law-abiding citizens.

The tenseness in the atmosphere around the state capital can best be described by those who felt the arrogant invasion by the Hitler regime, according to reports.

Reliable sources disclosed that most of the lawmakers, considered at one time friendly to Negroes, are now afraid to say anything . . ." I have never seen anything like this situation before," said one cautious legislator.

When Sen. J. D. DeBlieux of Baton Rouge opposed interposition, not in its entirety, he asked that the body not to attack the judiciary. He further solicited the help from certain so-called "liberals" from New Orleans, but it was learned, they turned him down.

The most talked of thing in this "hotbed of hatred" is the possibility that Negroes might be swimming in the same pools and using the same golf links and parks.

Informational sources related that the majority of the decisions and plans are not formulated in the capitol, but have their origin in local hotels and private clubs. The assembly lines were listed as the Heidelberg and King hotels and the Eagle Club.

The un-Democratic attitudes and un-Christian conditions prevalent in the Red Stick City during the past several days depicts a typical scene of what happens in neighboring Mississippi. Several days ago, it was learned, a group of certain liberals visited Gov. Long to see what could be done.

At the time of the session, the meeting was continually interrupted by a tirade of telegram messages, telephone calls, etc. allegedly spearheaded by San. Rainach and Leander Perez, two pro-segregation stalwarts.

Those elected officials who had been counted on as friends of Negroes, are complaining that nothing can be done. It is hardly believed that any will make a move for fear of getting the "evil eye." The tense condition gripping at the hearts of men dedicated to the democratic principles of this country, has quickly and quietly separated the duty-bound into the camp of the "where you lead I must follow or else."

Meanwhile, a flashback to the last statewide election will indicate that New Orleans Negro voters failed miserably by not strongly backing the return of Mrs. Bland Cox Bruns, Bernard T. Engert and David McHower, who stood up against Amendment 16. All were subsequently defeated for re-election which again points up the fact that Negroes cannot elect anybody unless they increase their voting potential and stand behind proven candidates.

Discussions of the flood of segregation bills designed to halt integration in all schools, colleges and other areas which reliable sources hinted that any unfavorable votes would be like committing political suicide.

The resultant effect of the "freeway to hatred" here is expected to awaken the Negro voters that something must be done to rid the state of "hoodwinked" politicians who are afraid to follow the dictates of their minds, hearts and soul to legislate for the betterment and not the deriment of the state.

Among the "simple" and stringent proposals concocted by a group of so-called intelligent lawmakers are: to dismiss teachers, school bus drivers and other employees who either belong or contribute to the NAACP or advocate integration in public schools or state colleges; to prohibit television station from showing or displaying any interracial theatrical, drama, vauldeville, burlesque, skit, dancing entertainment or any such program in which members of the white and Negro race participate or which involve social contacts between members of the two races; to ban all interracial activities, including athletics contests; to maintain segregated waiting rooms for intrastate passengers on public transportation lines; require enrollees at colleges and universities to present certificates from their school and parish superintendents attesting to eligibility and good moral character; to eliminate compulsory attendance at public schools forced to integrate; to extend the police power of the state to public parks and recreational facilities; to change the state constitution withdrawing state consent for suits against public bodies as the state parks and recreation commission, city and parish park commissions, the state board of education, LSU board, parish school boards and city school districts in Monroe, Lake Charles and Bogalusa, and others not worthy of the time wasted in preparing them.

Meanwhile Negroes are wondering when the pro-seg, white supremacy leaders are going to introduce a bill making it mandatory for all white people and those alleged to be white to prove their claim of pure, untainted white blood by going back four or five generations and producing records to substantiate the fact they do not have one fatal drop of Negro blood or ever consorted with Negroes to produce 'passe pour blanches.' The segregation committee headed by Sen. Rainach might turn up some interesting facts were it to pursue such a line of investigation. Some other highly secretive, expert investigative groups who are investigating along similar lines have made some remarkable discoveries about racial backgrounds in Louisiana. They are finding out what Huey Long believed many years ago about the complexion of this state. Maybe Louisiana was integrated long ago and is now afraid to find out if it is really true.

Louisiana Bills Ask Race Bars

Star P. 14-A, Fri. 6-1-56

BATON ROUGE, La., June 1 (AP).—Segregationists introduced bills in the Louisiana Legislature yesterday to preserve segregation in public buildings and shut off State aid to private schools that desegregate.

Two Senate measures, aimed primarily at Catholic and other private schools, would:

1. Cut off free school books, school lunch funds and other State aid to elementary and secondary schools which end racial segregation.

2. Forbid State recognition of graduates from any elementary or secondary school that desegregated.

Archbishop Joseph Rummel of New Orleans is expected to announce in a few days whether the New Orleans Catholic schools system will be desegregated next fall.

A constitutional amendment would end property tax exemption for schools and colleges not operated separately for white and colored persons.

In the House, three segregation bills were offered, to:

1. Require superintendents of public buildings to make sure separate facilities — sanitary, drinking and seating—be provided for whites and Negroes in their buildings.

2. Prohibit hotels or other lodging places and all public eating establishments from mixing the races. This provision would be enacted in the "exercise of the State police power to regulate public health and morals, and to maintain peace and good order in the State."

3. Require employers to furnish separate sanitary facilities, eating and drinking, for employes of white and Negro races.

All three proposals provide the same penalty for violations, $100 to $1,000 fines and 60 days to one year in jail.

LA. SEGREGATION LAWS ARE VOTED

Times-Picayune, New Orleans, Sun. 6-22-56

House Sends Five Bills to State Senate

BATON ROUGE, June 21 (AP)—The Louisiana House Monday swiftly and unanimously passed and sent to the Senate five bills to tighten the state's segregation laws.

A few simple explanations were offered. There was no debate. Votes ranged from 92-0 to 96-0.

The bills, including a proposed constitutional amendment, deal with such questions as white and Negro waiting rooms, public park facilities and tighter college entrance requirements.

The five bills are part of a total of 17 on the segregation question introduced in the current Legislature. The deadline for introductions is past.

Extend Police Power

The bills would:

1. Extend the police power of the state to public parks and recreational facilities.

2. Change the state constitution withdrawing state consent for suits against public bodies as the state parks and recreation commission, city and parish park commissions, the state board of education, Louisiana State university board, parish school boards and city school districts in Monroe, Lake Charles and Bogalusa.

3. Maintain segregated waiting rooms for intrastate passengers on public transportation lines.

4. Require enrollees at colleges and universities to present certificates from their school and parish superintendents attesting to eligibility and good moral character.

5. Eliminate compulsory school attendance at public schools forced to integrate.

Six More Bills

Six more segregation bills were added to the stack of proposals Sunday night. . . . The joint segregation committee advanced four making it possible to dismiss teachers, school bus drivers and other employes who either belong or contribute to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People or advocate integration in public schools or state colleges.

In the Senate, Sens. Brenham Crothers of Ferriday, Andrew Sevier of Tallulah and Louis Folse of Arabi, proposed a bill prohibiting television stations "from showing or displaying any inter-racial theatrical, drama, vaudeville, burlesque, skit, dancing entertainment or any such program in which members of the white and Negro race participate or which involve social contacts between members of the white and Negro races."

The proposals accuse TV of following "the Communist technique of brainwashing for racial integration by bringing into private homes in this state harmful programs designed to affect the minds and attitudes of juveniles and thereby contribute to juvenile delinquency."

Louisiana Senate Okays Four Bills For Segregation

Advertiser, Fri. 6-22-56, Montgomery

BATON ROUGE, June 21 (AP)—The Louisiana Senate without debate or opposition today voted final legislative passage to four bills to permit firing of teachers who advocate racial integration. P.I.-C

The bills now go to Gov. Earl Long for his signature.

The four proposals involving teacher tenure are the last major items of a 12-measure legislative program sponsored by the joint legislative segregation committee.

Catholic Body Calls Racists Subversive

Defender p.4 Sat. 6-23-56

List 10 Points Supporting View

Chicago, Ill.

NEW ORLEANS — A unit of the Catholic Committee of the South has issued a 10-point statement to support its charge that Southern white supremacy groups who organize "racism" are "anti-American, anti-Catholic, anti-Southern and irreligious."

The committee's Commission on Human Rights released its statement here in response to a request by a spokesman for a white supremacy group who invited the commission to explain the basis for its charges.

Father Joceph H. Fichter, S. J., is the founder and moderator of the Commission on Human Rights.

CALLED THREAT

Calling the "un-American activities" of Southern white supremacy groups "the greatest threat to the greatest number of people", the commission's statement listed 10 points to substantate its charge that the actions of these groups have been anti-American in both spirit and practice.

Each point was in response to specific actions taken by Southern white supremacists. The points were:

1. It is subversion of the American government, the statement began, to advocate armed insurrection, to suggest that Southern states band together and fight, to dare the federal government to send troops to enforce the desegregation rulings of the U. S. Supreme Court.

2. It is subversion of the American ideal of free, universal education to threaten the closing down of the public school system in order to avoid desegration.

AMERICAN SYSTEM

3. It is subversion of the American system of separation of Church and State, to promote legislation which would interfere with the operation of private and Church schools and institutions.

4. It is subversion of the American system of free enterprise to drive people out of business, prevent them form getting credit, threaten the safety of their customers and suppliers, simply because these pople are on the side of racial desegregation.

5. It is subversion of American democracy and comletely foreign to promote the American concept of human eqaulity, to hold, preach and promote the doctrine of racial supremacy.

FORCED JIM CROW

6. It is subversion of American democracy to put into practice the foreign ideology of racism by insisting upon compulsory segregation of the races.

7. It is subversion of the American system of equal opportunity for all to deprive large numbers of Negroes of the equal chance to participate in voting and holding office, in schooling and recreation, in housing and property ownership, in job-training and job-advancement, in jury duty and equal protection of the law.

8. It is subversion of the American spirit of fair play to use "smear tactics" against the good name, reputation and loyalty of fellow citizens.

ATTACK COURT

9. It is subversion of the American political system to attack the United States Supreme Court as an institution.

10. It is subversion of the American legal system to maintain that "law is merely public opinion", that a law is not binding on those people who do not like the law.

The commission concluded its statement by stressing its belief that a majority of Southerners, white and colored, would not "fall easily into the trap of un-Americanism which white supremacy groups are trying to set."

It asked Americans of good will of both races to work out race problems, harmoniously, " in the American way of tolerance, justice and fair play."

Standing Up And Being Counted

Weekly Ill.

The Negro citizens of this state are duly alarmed and concerned at the current outburst of vicious and repressive segregation legislation that is currently being passed in the Louisiana legislature. A mighty lot of goodwill and good race relations are being washed down the drain by the Louisiana legislature apparently trying to ape several defiant Southern states who have gone off on the deep end in this matter of refusing to abide by and comply with the law of the land as recently enunciated by the U. S. Supreme Court.

How Negroes in this state feel about this tense and lamentable state of affairs in our fair state is probably best stated in 'The Negro's Declaration Of Intention' recently printed in the Louisiana Baptist Advocate 'voice of 150,000 Baptists' in the state prepared by Rev. J. H. Jackson, president of the National Baptist Convention, U. S. A., Inc. and approved by 5,000,000 Baptist ministers and their congregations.

In the preface to the Declaration Of Intention Dr. Jackson said in part 'In recent days, many questions have been raised about the new wave of terror sweeping the Southland . . . Many people in Europe, including Russia as well as those in Africa and South America and the Isles of the sea, are concerned about the basic reaction of the Negro population . . . Will they remain loyal, or will they turn communist? It was the writer's opinion that some kind of expression of outlook, aims and purpose would be of untold value. Hence this Declaration Of Intention."

DECLARATION

1. At all times, WE INTEND to support the Federal Constitution, to obey the laws of the land, to avoid contempt of courts, and to respect the judgments and decrees of the Supreme Court of the United States of America, and to always abide by the same.

Sat. 6-9-56

2. Whatever is said or done against the United States of America by enemies foreign or domestic; we will ever oppose with all of our heart, mind, body, soul and strength.

3. WE INTEND to continue to teach our children that this nation is a great free republic of law and order, with a system of government Of the People, By the People, and For the People. And any person who disobeys the laws of the land and teaches others to do so, is a declared enemy of this nation, and is working for its overthrow; and hence, does not deserve the right of free participation in the nation's life, and is unworthy of the security that the country gives, and is subject to the penalties of the law. We shall also teach our children that this nation under God, was founded in the spirit of justice, freedom, and due regard for moral law, and cannot survive without our remaining true to its foundation principles.

4. WE INTEND to participate in the total cultural life of the nation, both for personal growth and development, and for the further progress of the country itself.

5. WE INTEND always, to cherish and to give thanks for those natural endowments and special gifts that have made our race great; and pledge all of our talents and resources in the building of a better social order and a more democratic world.

6. In spite of the doctrine of the segregationist, we shall always believe that the basic quality of real distinction, is character not color; and the stature of a person is determined by the power of his mind, the purity of his heart, and the highest possible dedication of his life.

7. WE INTEND to crusade against all the evils in our society that are designed to poison creative human relationships, and to crush the constructive growth of human personality, and to fight against the false doctrine which claims that some men are by origin, birth and nature, superior to others.

8. While we shall recognize a need for the patience that accompanies growth, WE INTEND at all times, to reject that doctrine of gradualism which implies that the established laws of the land should be gradually applied, and gradually obeyed, in order to respect the unjust traditions of men, and to give free reign and honor to destructive prejudices.

9. WE INTEND to take every legal step to employ every constructive measure, and to cooperate with every group of loyal Americans in the struggle to preserve all of the nation's ideals, and to overcome every economic, political and cultural stumbling block that hinders the further progress of this great republic.

10. With love for our nation, good-will towards all, utter devotion to the Federal Constitution, and undying faith in God; WE INTEND to continue our struggle for the complete victory of freedom on every front, and the preservation of the soul of the nation whatever the cost. And if we are slain by the forces of oppression before our high purpose is achieved: we pray that we shall sleep under the shadows of the flag that we love, and that our flowing blood shall help to wash from the nation's life, every blot of shame; and our bleached bones shall help to fertilize our hallowed soil for those who come after us; and our sacred dust shall be a silent testimony and a lasting memorial to our eternal quest for justice, peace and goodwill.

Police Jurors In Louisiana Defy Integration Decisions

By The United Press

NEW ORLEANS, May 1.—Louisiana police jurors Tuesday defied the United States Supreme Court orders regarding segregation which one Caddo Parish juror said "could very well lead to our first dictatorship."

The jurors, by voice vote, unanimously adopted a motion by another Caddo Parish juror, L. F. Clawson, condemning the decisions.

"We're not going to become integrated in 500 or a thousand years," Mr. Clawson said in a fiery speech.

The Police Jury Association of Louisiana ended a two-day meeting Tuesday night.

Caddo Police Juror George O. Baird said the Supreme Court decision was based on writing, much of them "by left wingers, rather than on law.

'Natural Law'

"God put the red man in America. He put the black man in Africa. He put the yellow man in Asia and the white man in Europe. Segregation is a natural law."

The high court decision, Mr. Baird said, "could very well lead to our first dictatorship."

Mr. Clawson said the decision could not be blamed on the Republicans.

"There are seven Democrats on the Supreme Court and two Republicans. If seven weak-kneed Democrats can let two Republicans tell them what to do they have no business there."

Local Control Urged

Earlier Gov. Robert F. Kennon urged the jurors to "demand that Baton Rouge give you a maximum of local control."

"I hope we get to the point where you don't have to go to Baton Rouge for anything. No matter how much a governor has to give, it gives out before you have a chance to get to everybody."

He cited the $2,500,000 annual appropriation included in the long-range highway program passed under his Administration as a step toward aiding local police juries.

LONG SIGNS TWO NO-MIXING BILLS

Measures Cover Waiting Rooms, Schools

BATON ROUGE, June 22 (AP)—Gov. Earl Long today signed two segregation bills because he didn't "want Garrett to think I'm courting the colored people."

Garrett is Rep. John Garrett of Claiborne Parish, vice chairman of the Legislative Segregation Committee.

The bills would:

1. Require a segregated travel waiting rooms for intrastate travel and lump nonsegregated interstate waiting rooms in with the colored room for intrastate passengers.

2. Knock out the compulsory school attendance law where schools are integrated under court order.

The bills become law Aug. 1, 20 days after the session ends.

Long, visiting the press table in the House, told reporters:

"I signed one of brother Garrett's bills which makes it a penitentiary offense for a Negro to stick his head in a place where a white man is sitting."

Presumably he meant the bill concerning travel waiting rooms, but Long did not explain his remark.

He continued, "I don't know how much good these bills will do, but I don't want Garrett to think I'm courting the colored people."

The two measures, part of a 12-proposal segregation package sponsored by the segregation committee, were the third and fourth segregation proposals signed by the governor.

Two previous bills would place segregation in recreational facilities and parks under the state's police power and require certificates of eligibility and moral character from school principals and superintendents from applicants to state colleges and universities.

Four other segregation committee bills passed the Senate yesterday, permitting firing of teachers who advocate racial integration. They now await Long's signature.

Previously, the Legislature adopted interposition, passing a resolution which declared the U.S. Supreme Court's school segregation ruling unconstitutional.

"WATCH DOG"

Louisiana Prepares New Court Flaunting Program

BATON ROUGE, La. — (INS) — A 12-point legislative program designed to preserve racial segregation in Louisiana was ready Friday for the signature of Gov. Earl K. Long.

The measure spell out new state power to enforce segregation in schools, public transportation, state parks and other recreational facilities. They reenact provisions of Louisiana law, designed to circumvent the U. S. Supreme Court's desegregation ruling, which were held unconstitutional by a Federal District Court.

The legislature gave final approval to the last four proposals Thursday. The program becomes law when the bills are signed by the Governor.

Included were measures which would prohibit teachers and other school employes from contributing to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and permitting dismissal of teachers who advocate racial integration in the public schools. The NAACP has been outlawed in Louisiana by a state court.

The new measures call for continued segregation in public transportation waiting rooms, grant the state police powers to enforce segregation in state parks and other recreational facilities.

The legislature joined those of a number of other Southern states in approving a resolution of interposition, holding the U. S Supreme Court school segregation ruling not applicable in Louisiana.

The school program also tightens entrance requirements, calling for certificates of moral character from school officials for college student applicants, and abolishes compulsory school attendance in event scaool integration is ordered.

Other measures would require legislative approval before integration suits might be field against state agencies, and establish a legislative "watch dog" committee to keep up with integration efforts.

New Sports Segregation Law Takes Effect In Louisiana

Advertiser Tues. 11-16-56
Montgomery Ala.

NEW ORLEANS, Oct. 15 (AP) — Louisiana put its new sports segregation law ino effect today and a backer of the act predicted the people themselves would make sure it was enforced.

The law makes it illegal for white and Negro amateur and professional players to compete in the same "athletic training, games, sports or contests." Separate seating for spectators also is required under the act, which carries a maximum penalty of $1,000 fine and one-year imprisonment.

Sen. W. M. Rainach of Summerfield, chairman of the legislative committee on segregation which drafted the act, said "this law has probably the strongest public support of any segregation measure enacted by the Louisiana legislature."

Rainach said he looked for any violations to be "called to the attention of the proper authorities by the people themselves. I don't think our committee will have to worry about enforcement."

NO TROUBLE ANTICIPATED

"I am not anticipating any trouble at all because the people of this state are firm in their determination and they are becoming rapidly organized and strong in their position to maintain segregation."

Rainach also is president of the Louisiana Assn. of Citizens Councils. The citizens councils are dedicated to preserving segregation.

The bill, passed by the May session of the legislature, was signed by Gov. Earl Long July 17.

The law did not go into effect until today because of a possibility, when the bill was being discussed, that Shreveport might get into the Texas League playoffs. It turned out the precaution was unncessary. Shreveport finished seventh.

Long, who couldn't be reached for comments today, previously said he was neutral on the question. However, he said once that he thought the law eventually would wind up in court.

Rainach apparently doesn't expect any trouble there.

"With the rising temper of public opinion on this issue, I doubt the wisdom and effectiveness of a court test," Rainach said.

NO PLANS KNOWN

A. P. Tureaud, lawyer for the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, said he didn't know of any plans for contesting the law.

Paul DeBlanc, president of the Mid-Winter Sports Assn. which sponsors the Sugar Bowl, had no comment.

The Sugar Bow, several universities in the state, and the Louisiana Invitational Basketball Tournament at Shreveport already have felt the effects of the bill. Some schools cancelled contracts because of Negroes on their squads. Others said they were voiding contracts on grounds of principle.

The University of Wisconsin acted first. It cancelled a 1957-58 home - and - home agreement for football games with Louisiana State.

GAMES CALLED OFF

Seven schools called off basketball games scheduled for the upcoming season. Notre Dame, Dayton and St. Louis dropped out of the Sugar Bowl tourney.

Under the new law white and Negro boxers will not even be able to work out against each other, a not uncommon practice here.

The big baseball question is what will happen to Shreveport's entry in the Texas League.

Shreveport doesn't have any Negroes, but other clubs in the loop play Negroes there. The question may be answered tomorrow at a league meeting in Dallas.

Louisiana sports ban now in effect

Afro-American p. 17
Baltimore Md.

NEW ORLEANS (ANP) — A ban on interracial mixing in sports passed by the Louisiana State Legislature last May over strong protests and which is expected to have far-reaching effect for years to come, went into effect throughout the state last week.

Pushed through the state legislature by proponents of segregation, the law makes it illegal for colored and white amateur and professional players to compete in the same "athletic training, games, sports or contests." It provides a maximum penalty for violation of $1,000 or one year imprisonment.

THE PLAN, before becoming law, was bitterly opposed by the Midwinter Sporting Association, which sponsored the annual Sugar Bowl games, and the Southern Association of baseball. Both groups felt that it would wreck sporting events under their jurisdiction.

Their predictions proved right, when a number of college basketball and football teams pulled out of the Sugar Bowl classic. Others cancelled games scheduled with teams both in Louisiana and in northern cities.

A number of baseball teams are said to be also planning to bypass the state and play their spring exhibition games elsewhere.

However, predicted financial losses and disruption of the Sugar Bowl schedule failed to impress the Louisiana legislators, who voted the edict into law.

CITIZENS COUNCIL MOVE

Louisiana Vote Rejects Plan To Trim Negro Registration

Advertiser Sat. 6-B
Montgomery Ala.
Thurs. 11-15-56

BATON ROUGE, La., Nov. 14 (AP)—Louisiana voters defeated a proposed constitutional amendment designed to help white citizens councils trim Negro voting, but okayed another proposal aimed at slowing school integration lawsuits, complete returns showed today.

Both measures were drafted by the legislative "watch dog" committee on segregation, which previously has won lopsided approval for its proposals.

Final but unofficial returns from the Secretary of State's office gave Amendment 47, setting up a new procedure for handling appeal of persons denied vote registration, a 190,410 to 178,833 unfavorable vote.

The other amendment, No. 48, withdrawing state approval for suits against a number of state agencies such as school boards and recreation commissions, was approved 233,015.

It was designed to block future integration lawsuits against parish school systems and recreation departments by requiring approval of the Legislature for such suits.

The first proposal grew out of a drive against Negro vote registration before the Nov. 6 election. In more than a dozen parishes (counties), pro - segregation groups have challenged some Negro voters, forcing them to prove they were properly registered.

The amendment would have provided two administrative steps before the voter losing his registration could take the matter into court, setting up administrative barriers to a federal court action.

The Public Affairs Research Council, an independent research group, contended "the proposed appeal procedure could be used as a political weapon to discourage registration of factional opponents or other groups."

The returns also showed voters rejected Gov. Earl Long's proposed 1957 constitutional convention nearly six to one, complete but unofficial election returns showed today.

Final results were not avialable on President Eisenhower's victory sweep in Louisiana. He carried the state over Adlai Stevenson by a margin of better than 75,000 ballots in earlier tabulations.

Louisianians okayed the 16-million-dollar bonus for World War One veterans in a tight decision, 199,054 to 191,965, and the two million dollars extra to complete payment of the Korean bonus, 269,310 to 117,433.

FBI 'BROWBEATING' OF LOUISIANA DENIED

Commercial Appeal
Memphis Tenn.

Brooks Says South Treated 'Like Conquered Province'

Sun. 12-14-56

WASHINGTON, Dec. 13.—(UP) —The Justice Department denied Thursday that the FBI has been browbeating anybody in Louisiana.

It said the FBI has been questioning some Northern Louisianans but did not say why.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Warren Olney III referred to the FBI activity in reply to a complaint by Representative Overton Brooks (D., La.) that the department was treating the South "like a conquered province."

Mr. Brooks sent Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. a telegram demanding FBI agents cease questioning of pro-segregation council members. Mr. Brooks said "a proper foundation" had not been laid for such activity.

The Louisiana Democrat also said Federal agents had investigated public officials and others "whose records" as law abiding people have never been questioned.

Mr. Olney, head of the Department's Criminal Division, said "persons being interviewed by (the) FBI in Northern Louisiana are for the most part witnesses rather than prospective defendants."

Mr. Olney told Mr. Brooks all interviews are conducted with the FBI's "usual courtesy and propriety."

Negro Charges Bus Companies With 'Unlawful Humiliation'

Advertiser Fri 12-14-56

Montgomery, Ala.

SHREVEPORT, La., Dec. 13 (AP)—A 76-year-old Pasadena, Calif., Negro today charged that his civil rights were violated in an incedent at a local bus station last November.

P. 5-a

The suit, received in the mail here today by federal court officials, sought a $400,000 judgment.

38a

It was filed in the name of I. H. Spears, who said in the suit he was acting as his own lawyer. He said his only source of income was an $89 a month old age pension.

The City of Shreveport, 18 unidentified city policemen and the Coninental Bus System, Coninental Trailways, Dixie Lines Inc., of Dallas and Southern Lines Inc. of Alexandria were named as defendants.

Spears said he was enroute from El Dorado, Ark., to Witchita Falls, Tex., and was waiting for a bus to continue his journey when the incident occurred Nov. 13.

Spears said he was "unlawfully and wrongfully assaulted, abused, humiliated, shocked and threatened with being put in jail in Shreveport."

Charles Kenney, regional manager for the bus company here, gave the following version:

Spears was sitting in the white waiting room and a policeman asked him to move to the Negro section. Instead of leaving, Spears went to a telephone booth. He was again asked to leave the waiting room. He then went outside.

When Spears' bus arrived, he entered and sat in the rear, Kenney said, adding there was no disturbance.

Catholics' Choice of Negro As Loyola Speaker Is Hit

Courier-Journal P.1 Mon. 2-27-56

New Orleans, Feb. 26 (AP)—An Orleans Parish (County) School Board member today termed "most regrettable" an invitation by Loyola University of the South to Hulan E. Jack, Negro president of the Borough of Manhattan, City of New York, to speak on a Catholic interracial program.

Jack addressed a nonsegregated crowd at the Roman Catholic university on a program headed by Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans.

Emile A. Wagner, Jr., New Orleans attorney and member of a school board pledged to retain segregation in public schools, said in a telephone interview, "I am not going to say Mr. Jack is a Communist or anything like that—I don't know.

Louisville Ky.

Releases Statement

"But the public is entitled to know the facts," he added.

He released to the press four typewritten copies marked "Information from the files of the Committee on Un-American Activities, United States House of Representatives." The files were undated and unsigned. They allegedly contained information associating Jack's name with organizations cited as subversive.

When informed of Wagner's action, Jack said he denied "these associations categorically. I never had any activities with these organizations of any nature."

Jack said communism was "never an issue in my career." He said he had been a member of the Democratic Party for 25 years and added:

"I'm an American citizen and proud of it."

Wagner's prepared statement said:

"Certain institutions and agencies in their zeal to foist racial integration upon an unwilling and intellectually sincere majority may be unwittingly aligning themselves with sinister forces which are working to bring about not only their own destruction but also the destruction of the democratic way of life."

Archbishop Rummel said almost the same thing of the pro-segregation forces.

The prelate said segregation leaders should ask themselves whether they "are really acting as genuine Americans or whether they are doing the work of those striving to introduce the principles of atheism and infidelity and the principles of communism in the United States."

Negroes Urged to Fight

Atlanta Ga. 2-29-56

NEW ORLEANS, March 19 (AP)—A mass meeting of about 5,000 Negroes was urged yesterday to "rise up" and let White Citizens Councils know "the time is out for segregation."

Baltimore Md. 2-20-56

The audience contributed $3,000 in support of the Negroes in the Montgomery trial. The sponsor of the meeting was the New Orleans Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance, headed by the Rev. A. L. Davis Jr.

"We face a crisis, and the quality of our strength is now being tested," Mr. Davis, Negro pastor of the New Zion Baptist Church, said.

Light In New Orleans

(From The New York Times)

Along with his order requiring integration of the schools of New Orleans "with all deliberate speed," a United States District Judge has written an opinion to stir the heart of every citizen concerned with the great and difficult question now rocking the Deep South. These are his words:

Daily World

The problem of changing a people's mores, particularly those with an emotional overlay, is not to be taken lightly. It is a problem which will require the utmost patience, understanding, generosity and forbearance and from all of us of whatever race.

But the magnitude of the problem may not nullify the principle. And that principle is that we are, all of us, freeborn Americans with a right to make our way unfettered by sanctions imposed by man because of the work of God.

Wed. 2-29-56

Atlanta, Ga.

Judge James Skelly Wright deserves honor for this eloquent expression. He himself is a Southern Democrat, born in New Orleans forty-five years ago, educated at Loyola University and named to the Federal bench by President Truman in 1949. He told the Orleans Parish School Board that it could not continue segregation indefinitely, but that his order did not mean that the public schools of the Deep South's largest city "would be completely desegregated overnight or even in a year or more." In other words, Judge Wright is urging his fellow-citizens of New Orleans to recognize that desegregation is not merely inevitable but morally necessary as well, and that it will come with gradualism and can come without undue friction.

Fortunately, many leaders in the South hold similar views. Only a few days ago more than 200 whites and Negroes met together in Montgomery itself at the annual conference of the Alabama Council on Human Relations in an effort to work out rational ways of "resolving community conflicts." At the University of Alabama, recent scene of shameful rioting against a Negro student, the better element among the undergraduates is now making itself heard in protest. The more patience and understanding shown by both Negroes and whites, the easier and surer will this revolutionary transition be made.

Integration Issue Flares At New Orleans Session

Evening Star P.1 Mon. 2-27-56

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 27 (AP).—An Orleans Parish (County) school board member, who is pledged to maintain racial segregation, has accused Roman Catholic institutions of perhaps "unwittingly aligning themselves with sinister forces."

Emile A. Wagner, jr., made the assertion yesterday after a nonsegregated interracial meeting at Loyola of the South, a Catholic university. Hulan E. Jack, Negro president of New York City's Borough of Manhattan, shared the speakers' platform with Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel.

Washington D.C.

Mr. Wagner, a Catholic and an alumnus of Loyola, said in a statement criticizing the university that "certain institutions and agencies in their zeal to foist racial integration upon an unwilling and intellectually sincere majority may be unwittingly aligning themselves with sinister forces which are working to bring about . . . the destruction of the democratic way of life."

Archbishop Rummel, in his speech, had similar charges to make of segregation defenders. The Archbishop said they may be "doing the work of those striving to introduce the principles of atheism and infidelity and the principles of Communism in the United States."

Mr. Wagner strongly objected to the appearance of the New York speaker. "I am not going to say Mr. Jack is a Communist, or anything like that—I don't know," he said. "But the public is entitled to know the facts."

The school board member released to the press four typewritten pages allegedly containing information associating Mr. Jack with organizations listed as subversive."

Mr. Jack, categorically denying the associations, said, "I never had any activities with to use my name at any time."

Mr. Jack said he has always fought communism.

He said he is wholeheartedly in favor of the methods employed by the Negroes in Montgomery, Ala., in the bus segregation dispute.

He also said he approves the tactics of Autherine Lucy, Negro woman barred from the University of Alabama.

"I would not advocate force," Mr. Jack said. "Whatever we do, let's do it peacefully.

Data Sent by Clerk

The typewritten pages released by Mr. Wagner were undated and unsigned. They were marked "Information from the files of the Committee on Un-American Activities U. S. House of Representatives."

Mr. Wagner was quoted as saying the files were sent to him by Mrs Juliette Joray, acting clerk of the House committee. In Washington, Mrs. Joray said these organizations of any nature."

When he arrived in New York today by plane, Mr. Jack said any charge that he was linked with Communists is "a diabolical scheme."

Mr. Jack, an active Roman Catholic layman, repeated that he never has been a member of any group known to him to be subversive.

Denounces Accusation

"The diabolical charges made against me," he told newsmen at LaGuardia Field, "are an outgrowth of the White Citizens Council, which is staging a rear guard action to disobey the decision handed by the Supreme Court on the desegregation in schools."

Asked about the list of organizations released by Mr. Wagner, Mr. Jack said:

"I know I have never been a member of any of these organizations as mentioned, nor have I given any one the authority she sent the data to Mr. Wagner on orders of Richard Arens, acting counsel for the committee.

Mr. Jack, who came to this country from the British West Indies 49 years ago, praised the archbishop in his comments here and said Archbishop Rummel has "stimulated the admiration of every right-thinking citizen in every corner of our country."

He said he was an American citizen "and proud of it." Mr. Jack, a member of the Democratic Party for 25 years and former member of the New York State Assembly, said his election to the presidency of Manhattan was a "practical demonstration of democracy in action which the Communists can never challenge."

Outspoken Segregation Foe

Archbishop Rummel is an outspoken opponent of racial segregation. In a pastoral letter February 19, the German-born archbishop condemned segregation and indicated he would integrate the New Orleans parochial schools, perhaps after September, 1956.

Last week he approved an editorial in the archdiocesan newspaper which warned Catholic lawmakers against attempting to include private schools in Louisiana's segregation laws. The editorial said the lawmakers, if their measures went into effect, might be subject to automatic excommunication from the church.

Three of the legislators, two of whom were defeated in the primary, said last night they intend to go ahead with plans to include private schools in the segregation laws.

Representative E. W. Gavolet, jr., said the excommunication warning in the editorial "is the explanation of one man who seeks first integration and not the free exercise of religion towards which the canon (rule) of the church is directed."

Letter Read in Catholic Churches

Louisiana Archbishop Assails Bias as 'Sinful'

By the Associated Press

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 19.—Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel in a strongly worded pastoral letter today denounced racial segregation as "morally wrong and sinful" and gace clear indication he intends to integrate New Orleans parochial schools.

His letter was read at all masses in all churches throughout the archdiocese, largest in the deep South with a Catholic population of 524,157. About 25 per cent are Negroes.

It was the first time New Orleans Catholics heard integration plans discussed in a public letter from the Archbishop. The reading at most churches commanded rapt attention.

Archdiocesan spokesmen previously have announced that plans are under way to integrate the Catholic schools some time after 1956, but this was the Archbishop's first public denunciation of segregation as a sin.

Largest School Unit

The New Orleans parochial school system is the state's largest single school unit. New Orleans is one of the few cities in the country where more children attend parochial than public schools.

Archbishop Rummel did not say when integration would come but pleaded "that the decision when made will be accepted in the spirit of Christian charity and justice."

"This is a problem which should be worked out not in an atmosphere of wrangling or contention or discord or hatred but in a spirit of conciliation and with a desire to achieve peace through justice and charity," he said.

Federal Order Issued

The New Orleans public school system is already under Federal District Court order to begin carrying out the 1954 United States Supreme Court decision ending public school segregation.

The court order came Wednesday after a special three-man Federal court declared all Louisiana school segregation laws unconstitutional.

Earlier this week three Catholic state legislators announced they would ask the May Legislature to include Catholic schools in these state segregation laws. Catholic schools were deleted from the original bills in 1954 at the urging of Archbishop Rummel.

More than 50 per cent of the South's Catholics live in Louisiana. But the Archbishop's letter had no effect on Louisiana's other two dioceses, Lafayette and Alexandria.

30 CATHOLIC LAYMEN FORM RACIAL STUDY

New Orleans Integration Foe Heads Organization

NEW ORLEANS, March 18.—(UP)—Thirty Roman Catholic laymen in this area have formed a corporation for "investigation and study" of compulsory racial integration.

The president of the organization is Emile A. Wagner Jr., a local attorney and outspoken foe of integration. He recently attacked officials of Loyola University for inviting Hulan Jack, Manhattan's Negro borough president, to speak at an interracial meeting.

Known as the Association of Catholic Laymen, the group said in articles of incorporation it would also "seek out and make known and denounce communist infiltration, if there be any in the integration movements."

The group is open only to "persons of the Caucasian race who profess the faith of the Holy Roman Catholic Church."

Mr. Wagner said the founders of the group intended to circulate 25,000 membership applications in the New Orleans area.

Catholic officials here, including Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel have said integration of the parochial schools was coming. Archbishop Rummel called segregation "a moral sin."

SEGREGATION FIGHT REACHES STALEMATE

Louisiana Lawmaker Says 'Pressure' Lessening

BATON ROUGE, La., March 18.—(UP)—A Louisiana segregation leader said Sunday the South has advanced to a stalemate in the fight against integration.

State Senator W. M. 'Willie' Rainach pointed to President Eisenhower's call for moderation in dealing with the race problem as a sign pressure for integration is lessening.

"The President realized he faces a much more difficult enforcement task than was at first believed when the United States Supreme Court issued its anti-segregation public school ruling," Senator Rainach said.

The courts and their supporters thought the South would not fight back and that there would be wholesale retreat, he said.

"But they have just realized how deep and intense the white man's resolve is to maintain our segregated way of life," Senator Rainach said.

Senator Rainach, who heads the joint Legislative Committee on Segregation, has helped draft most import state segregation laws passed in recent years.

It was largely Senator Rainach's public schools segregation laws which a 3-man Federal court in New Orleans declared unconstitutional last month.

He heads, also, the Association of Citizens Councils, which is a policy-making body for local citizens chapters.

Catholics May Ignore Bias Ban

By the Associated Press.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 20.—A group of Catholic lawmakers today proceeded with plans to prevent integration of Louisiana Catholic schools, despite a pastoral letter from Archbishop Joseph Rummel condemning segregation as "morally wrong and sinful."

The letter was read at all masses yesterday in the 120 churches throughout the Archdiocese of New Orleans and clearly indicated the archbishop intended to end segregation in church and school facilities.

Rep. E. W. Gravolet Jr. of Plaquemines Parish said the pastoral letter would have no effect on his group's plans to restore parochial schools to Louisiana's 1954 school segregation laws when the Legislature meets in May.

The state's segregation laws were declared unconstitutional last Wednesday by a three-judge United States Circuit Appeals Court which ordered New Orleans public schools to begin carrying out the 1954 United States Supreme Court decision banning school segregation.

ence Education Fund, which has actively supported integration.

He said his dismissal was a "great blow at the basic right of every individual to think for himself" and was an effort to intimidate those who sincerely believe that the days of segregation and discrimination are numbered.

In Shreveport, Police Jury Member Thomas P. Fitzgerald was asked for his resignation after refusing to support a resolution calling for an act of interposition against integration rulings.

a Coushatta, La., Negro leader indicated that he was leaving his hometown for California when he received threats apparently for his political activities. He acknowledged his plight in advertisement appearing in the local newspaper.

There were no immediate facts to prove whether a secret undercover campaign is being launched to deprive Negro leaders of their right to enjoy complete freedom of expression in small Louisiana towns. However, that is a partial contention of veteran observers.

Minister Forced To Flee Small La. Town

A Negro minister was mysteriously forced to flee the seat of his pastorate after being called from his humble parsonage in a small Louisiana town last week, allegedly by a group of white citizens, it was learned here this week.

The nature of the pressure brought to bear on the cleric was unknown at press time. The name of the minister was not disclosed pending further inquiries surrounding the circumstances of his enforced departure.

Reports indicated that the pastor was called from his parsonage, carried about 10 blocks, shot at and run out of town.

Efforts to contact the reverend for an interview were futile. However, sources closed to him revealed that he had no comment to make at this time.

The incident marked the second occurence involving a Negro minister within the past three months. The first such case involved the circumstances surrounding the strange death of the Rev. Ellis F. Wise, pastor of Mt. Olivet Methodist Church in Bastrop.

The Bastrop Cleric's body was found in a bayou on the old Monroe highway last January and the cloud of mystery of suicide or foul play still hangs in mid-air. He reportedly left his home several hours before his body was found by an elderly white man to visit a sick member.

Elsewhere on the segregation front:

• Louisiana State University rejected a proposed "color" clause that would have prevented LSU teams from playing against Negro athletes. The University Board of Supervisors also voted not to tighten entrance requirements, suggested by segregation leaders in an effort to head off more Negro students. LSU has admitted Negro graduate students under court order for several years.

• Two Negro students—subject of a bitter controversy within the national fraternity of Sigma Phi—were initiated into the Williams College chapter.

• At Atlanta, Negro leaders agreed to bring new court action before June in eight Southern states they said were in open rebellion against the United States in the matter of school desegregation. They are: Alabama, Florida, Georgia, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, South Carolina and Virginia.

Flare-up boils as Loyola invites Negro to speak

News Mon. 2-27-56 P. 15

Birmingham Ala.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 27 (AP) —An Orleans Parish (county) school board member who is pledged to maintain racial segregation has accused Roman Catholic institutions of perhaps "unwittingly aligning themselves with sinister forces."

Emile A. Wagner Jr. made the assertion yesterday following a non-segregated interracial meeting at Loyola of the South, a Catholic University. Hulan E. Jack, Negro president of New York City's borough of Manhattan, shared the speakers' platform with Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel.

Wagner, a Catholic and Loyola alumnus, said in a statement criticizing the university that "certain institutions and agencies in their zeal to foist racial integration upon an unwilling and intellectually sincere majority may be unwittingly aligning themselves with sinister forces which are working to bring about . . . the destruction of the democratic way of life."

RUMMEL, IN HIS speech, had similar charges to make of segregation defenders. The archbishop said they may be "doing the work of those striving to introduce the principles of atheism and infidelity and the principles of communism in the United States."

Priest Favoring Integration Gets Telephone Threat

Call Herald Shreveport, La. Fri. 3-30-56

NEW ORLEANS — (INS) — A pro-integration Catholic priest said Thursday, March 22, that he considers a telephoned threat on his life as "unrepresentative of the feelings of the better people of the South."

The Rev. Eugene McManus, 31, was threatened after he appeared as a speaker at a meeting on integration. He said the anonymous caller used "unprintable" language.

He said at the meeting that fear over the segregation issue has turned "the fair-minded people of our city into blinded, frenzied bigots."

He added that these fair-minded people are afraid to express their true feelings for fear "the fury of the mob will be turned against them."

RACIAL PROBLEM STUDY TO BE AIM

Times-Picayune Sun. 3-18-56

Catholic Group to Probe 'Compulsory Integration'

Thirty New Orleans area men have formed a corporation of Catholic laymen to investigate and study "compulsory integration" of the races. They aim at an area membership of 25,000. P. 19

Emile A. Wagner Jr., New Orleans attorney and a sharp critic of proposals calling for the integration of the races in the Catholic parochial schools in the archdiocese of New Orleans, announced the incorporation Saturday.

New Orleans La.

The organization's name is Association of Catholic Laymen. Wagner is its president.

Announced purposes of the association, as specified in the articles of incorporation, are:

"To foster, promote and protect the moral, physical, cultural and educational welfare and the general interests of all the people by an investigation and study, in all of its aspects, of the problem of compulsory integration of the black and white races.

Would Bar Red Infiltration

"To keep the public fully informed and alerted on all matters related thereto.

"To seek out, make known and denounce Communist infiltration, if any there be in the integration movements.

"To unite thoughtful and sincere persons in an organization which seeks to attain a prudent, just and peaceful solution to this racial problem.

"And to unite all Catholics in daily prayer to the end that the Holy Spirit may enlighten and guide this association, its members, and all other persons concerned with the issue of racial integration."

The articles of incorporation state that membership is open only to "persons of the Caucasian race who profess the faith of the Holy Roman Catholic church."

In addition to Wagner, other officers of the association are James Everett Brown, attorney, vice-president; William E. Blake Jr., food company executive, secretary and Henry L. Mason, finance corporation president, treasurer.

The articles further state that the corporation is organized without capital stock and is a non-profit organization.

Viewed as Detrimental

Commenting on the incorporation, Wagner said: "We feel that compulsory integration at this time would be detrimental to both races. It is a problem that needs a great deal more study."

Both Wagner and Brown, the vice-president, are former presidents of the Loyola university alumni association. Wagner recently rebuked Loyola officials for having Hulan E. Jack, Negro president of the borough of Manhattan, appear on the Loyola campus to speak in behalf of racial integration.

Asked to estimate the future size of the association, Wagner said, "Twenty-five thousand is not beyond the realm of possibility." That is the number of membership applications the corporation's founders plan to distribute, Wagner said.

He said the association will operate in the metropolitan New Orleans area, including the parishes of Orleans, St. Bernard, Jefferson and possibly Plaquemines.

"We intend to work within the framework of the dogmas and the established principles of the Catholic church," Wagner emphasized.

He said the charter members, who also constitute the association's first board of directors, elected their officers at a meeting last Monday. The same group, Wagner said, will meet again at 8 p. m. Monday in the New Orleans Atheltic Club "to develop further plans."

A seven-member executive committee consists of the four officers and A. R. Childress Jr., A. K. Lagarde and Daniel J. Lyons, Wagner said.

Other Charter Members

Other charter members named in the articles of incorporation are Donald J. Duclaux, H. D. Eaton Lloyd J. Fitzpatrick, Vincent C Jennaro, F. Lloyd Monroe, R. Allen Pendleton Jr., Gerard A. Rault, Jackson G. Ricau, James H. Rooney Jr., Raymond J. Salassi, James T. Skelly, James E. Steiner, Charles A. Bourgeois, J. Louie Boyer, Patrick W. Browne, Edward J. Cambre, Joseph S. Casey, Lucien C. Delery, Charles T. deMahy, C. C. Viguerie, Albert A. Demarest, Albert J. Derbes Jr., and Joseph E. Viguerie.

Their approach to the problem of "compulsory integration," Wagner went on, will be on an "intellectual and restrained basis without emotionalism." They will also "insure ourselves and the community that compulsory integration is free of Communist taint."

This function, Wagner said, would also be "for the protection of the integrationists themselves."

"We will investigate thoroughly," he continued, "all persons who head the integration movement insofar as its affects on the local level are concerned. Or on a national level, if that is indicated.

"We will also investigate all those brought to New Orleans as part of the integration movement. Many well-intentioned people have been duped by persons aligned with sinister interests."

Interst in the association, Wagner said, has been expressed elsewhere. In this connection he named Baton Rouge and Covington. He predicted similar associations will be formed in those communities.

Letters, Calls Bring Action

Wagner said the idea for such an organization came after he received "over 500 letters, not to mention long-distance and local telephone calls," praising him in his stand on the Jack appearance at Loyola.

"These people," he said, "were requesting leadership of some type to fairly clarify the question of compulsory integration." The Association of Catholic Laymen, he said, was the result of this expressed interest.

Asked whether the association would confer with church officials, Wagner answered: "On questions of dogmas we would certainly consult with a spiritual advisor."

The application for membership sets forth the association's announced objectives. Annual minimum membership dues are $1, according to the application.

A meeting of the general membership will be called "when the numbers warrant," Wagner said.

Second Major Movement

The association's registered office is in Room 702 of the Cigali building, and the corporation's mailing address is Post Office Box 1258, Zone 10, New Orleans, Wagner said.

Announcement of the incorporation of the association constitutes the second major organizing movement in the New Orleans area among foes of integration. Last week the Citizens' Council of New Orleans drew up plans for a mass meeting of area citizens councils at 8 p. m. Tuesday in Municipal Auditorium.

The reference to communism in the corporation's articles continues the stand Wagner made earlier in the Jack case. After Jack addressed a nonsegregated group, Wagner produced copies of files of the United States House of Representatives' committee on un-American activities which linked Jack, in the early 1940s, with a number of organizations declared in the later 1940s by the attorney general's office to be Communist and subversive. Jack has since denied any membership in the organizations.

Pro-Integration Priest Gets Threat

Herald 4-3-54

NEW ORLEANS — (UP) — A Roman Catholic priest revealed Thursday that an anonymous telephone caller threatened his life after the priest took part in a panel discussion on integration.

Miami, Fla.

The Rev. Eugene McManus labeled the caller a "crackpot" and said he was not frightened.

The caller, a man, called him a Communist and a Negro lover, Father McManus said. The caller also threatened his life, the clergyman said, and warned, "I'm going to get you."

Father McManus served on a panel Tuesday night at a meeting of the Citizens' Forum on Integration while cross-town some 8,000 persons attended a white citizens' council gathering of pro-segregationists.

T.P. 4-23-54

The threat, Father McManus said, apparently arose from newspaper accounts of his remarks at the forum.

"The quotations were incomplete, although the account was accurate," he said.

He was quoted as saying that the people of the South are afraid of their neighbors and that it "took courage" for some of the audience to tell their neighbors they were going to the forum.

"Many people are afraid of their neighbors. They are afraid of being called 'Negro lovers'."

Even the sincere desire of parents to protect their children has been perverted into hatred for Negroes, he said.

"Fair-minded people have been told by questionably sincere doctors, who know better, that Negroes in the classroom will transmit venereal diseases to their children.

"If we let threats . . . silence us, we are unworthy to be called Americans — unworthy to be called followers of Christ."

Interposition Cited in Quiz

Post + Times Herald

Washington, D. C.

NEW ORLEANS, April 5 (UP) — One of six witnesses summoned before the Senate Internal Security Subcommittee today invoked the doctrine of interposition in refusing to answer questions about possible Communist activities.

T.P. 4-5-54

Richard Feise, former director of a travel service, told Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.), chairman of the Subcommittee, he should know what interposition is "because you have taken the position yourself on another matter."

Eastland has urged that Southern States adopt interposition as a means of combatting court-enforced integration, contending that a state can interpose its sovereignty to halt any Federal invasion of powers reserved to the states until the dispute can be settled by the several states.

All six witnesses in the first of two days of open hearings refused to give more than bare identification facts about themselves.

Pauline Feuer, a widow and admitted former English teacher at a school in Moscow, was the only one who refused to cite the Fifth Amendment concerning self-incrimination. She was also the only one to say that she is not a Communist. But she would not answer questions about her affiliations while teaching in Moscow or on the day before she was subpenaed to appear before the Committee.

Sen. William Jenner (R-Ind.) and Sen. Arthur Watkins (R-Utah) sat on the Subcommittee with Eastland.

Eastland overruled all reasons for refusing to answer questions except the Fifth Amendment. Mrs. Feuer was warned she could be held in contempt of the Senate for refusing to answer questions on any other grounds.

Others who testified today were Mrs. Feise, a girl's school librarian; Mr. and Mrs. Grady Jenkins, and Mrs. Betty Liveright, wife of Herman Liveright, who was dismissed two weeks ago by WDSU-TV here after refusing to answer questions at a Subcommittee hearing at Washington.

All of the women witnesses were asked about their affiliation with the Parent-Teacher Association. Subcommittee Counsel Robert Morris indicated the Senators felt there was an organized attempt to infiltrate the PTA.

Fired Because He Opposed Segregation

By PAUL BURTON

NEW ORLEANS. — (INS) — A New Orleans Chamber of Commerce executive charged this week he was fired from his job because he opposes segregation.

T.P.

Robert D. Barnes, former editor of the Chamber of Commerce weekly news bulletin, said another factor in his dismissal was his membership on the board of directors of the Southern Conference Educational Fund.

The fund, directed by James Dombrowski, has been investigated by Congressional committees for possible Communist ties.

Barnes said in a statement that the fund has been "cleared of any evidence of wrongdoing" each time it has been investigated.

He added: "This dismissal is a blow at the basic right of every individual to think for himself—an effort to intimidate those who sincerely believe that the days of segregation and discrimination are numbered."

Whittaker Riggs, executive vice president of the Chamber of Commerce, said it was "damn presumptive" of anyone to think Barnes was fired for any of the reasons listed in the statement. He said, "Mr. Barnes left this morning by mutual consent." Riggs refused to comment further.

Robert W. Elsasser, president of the Chamber of Commerce, said he had no comment and referred newsmen to Riggs.

Barnes is the second man in recent days to charge that his dismissal resulted from the heated segregation controversy.

Herman Liveright was fired as program director for WDSU-TV on March 20 after he refused to tell the senate subcommittee on internal security whether or not he is or ever has been a communist.

Liveright, who refused to reply on the grounds that the committee had no right to pry into his personal beliefs, said he believed prosegregation forces in the New Orleans area engineered his appearance before the committee.

Economic Squeeze Upsets Louisiana

NEW ORLEANS (ANP)—Economic pressure has spread from Mississippi to Louisiana.

Negroes all over the state are beginning to feel this pressure. It is not so evident in the large cities, but in the rural sections it is most visible.

Negro teachers are told frankly that they must not attempt to attend Louisiana State University, lest they lose their jobs. Negro doctors are refused opportunity to practice in hospitals of the state. Bankers are frankly asking those seeking loans to show their White Citizens' Council cards before the loan is made.

As a result, many top Negro teachers are leaving the state. Many doctors are also leaving and absolutely refusing to go into the rural sections where gold mines await them if they want to remain mere pill-pushers. Top teachers refuse to come to Louisiana, fearful of punitive legislation against their profession. A steady movement of Negro citizens to out of state locations is reported constantly.

Segregation laws passed in Legislature and declared unconstitutional are still being put into effect by school boards of the state. Negro Mardi Gras clubs are declaring a recess for the 1957 Mardi Gras season, many of them saying they will use the funds to help a "liberty pot."

The NAACP has been outlawed, and as yet no other organization or movement has been organized to take its place.

Economic pressure has really spread from Mississippi to Louisiana.

Governor Long Heckles and Shouts at Wild Session—New Tax Bills Beaten

New York

BATON ROUGE, La., July 12 (AP)—The Louisiana Legislature early today completed the wildest session in many years. Gov. Earl Long caused most of the uproar.

The lawmakers brushed aside new taxes but set spending records. They repealed the right-to-work law but reinstated it for agricultural workers. They voted a big pay rise for teachers but killed the tax measure providing the funds.

Governor Long, younger brother of the late Senator Huey P. Long, carried on a running feud with anyone who opposed his program.

The 60-year-old Governor stalked the House and Senate floor, buttonholing members, heckling opponents and shouting instructions to his leaders.

He touched off a lusty name-calling feud with Wade Martin Jr., Secretary of State, and his father, chairman of the Louisiana Public Service Commission. Then he spurred legislation that stripped the younger Martin of his duties as State Insumance Commissioner and custodian of voting machines.

Mr. Long held the spotlight to the end, going before a joint meeting of the House and Senate shortly after midnight to talk more than one hour. He defended his actions during the session and bitterly attacked newspapers and foes of his tax program.

The House earlier had killed Mr. Long's tax bills. Each fell short, by a narrow margin, of the sixty-eight votes needed for two-thirds approval required under a constitutional amendment.

In a last-ditch effort, the Governor put through a constitutional amendment to repeal the two-thirds requirement.

However, it must be ratified by popular vote in November. Mr. Long predicts voter approval. Some thirty-seven legislators already have organized a state-wide fight to keep the two-thirds requirement.

Segregation, expected by many to be the top issue of the session, stirred little controversy.

The lawmakers gave quick approval to the twelve-measure program sponsored by the legislative "watchdog" committee on segregation.

These included:

¶An interposition resolution declaring unconstitutional the United States Supreme Court's segregation decisions.

¶Measures permitting the dismissal of teachers and school employes who advocate racial integration or belong to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, outlawed under state court order.

¶A series of bills designed to throw a legal tangle about segregation in recreation and parks facilities, schools and colleges and travel waiting rooms.

Both House and Senate also approved measures that would do these things:

¶Outlaw racially mixed social and athletic events.

¶Require employers to furnish separate sanitary facilities for white and Negro employes.

LONG URGED TO VETO SPORT SEGREGATION

Times P.31-2

NEW ORLEANS, July 14 (AP)—The Mid-Winter Sports Association, which sponsors the Sugar Bowl, and the president of the Texas League today asked Gov. Earl Long to veto a bill banning athletic competition between Negroes and whites in Louisiana.

New York

The association said the proposed law, which would become effective Oct. 15, would seriously handicap it in its New Year's sports festival.

Dick Butler, head of the Texas League, told Governor Long in a telegram that the bill probably would knock Shreveport out of the league.

Shreveport is the only Louisiana team in the Texas League.

The segregation bill was passed two weeks ago by the legislature. It would:

"Prohibit all interracial dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games, sports or contests and other activities * * * ."

It would require segregated seating and "separate sanitary drinking water and other facilities for members of the white and Negro races * * *."

The Governor has until Tuesday to sign or veto the bill. He has not indicated when he will act or what action he will take. If he takes no action the bill becomes law.

Before the 1955 Navy-Mississippi game and the 1956 Georgia Tech-Pittsburgh game, the Sugar Bowl announced the Northern schools' stands would not be segregated.

Ministers Ask Audience With 'Governor Of All The People'

Weekly P.1 New Orleans, La.

Sept. 7-56

Gov. Earl Long was urged to fulfill his pledge of being governor of all the people of Louisiana by vetoing segregation bills which "are manifestly designed to destroy the basic legal rights of a substantial minority of the people."

The plea was made by the Rev. A. L. Davis, president, Interdenominational Ministerial Alliance.

Text of Dr. Davis' letter follows:

"We have noted with growing apprehension the passage of bills by the State Legislature designed to deprive Louisiana Negroes of certain basic rights. We especially deplore the approval of H1447, H1449 and H1450 which, in effect, destroys the constitutional freedom of belief and action of Louisiana teachers.

"Surely you will agree that for a teacher to advocate compliance with the highest law of the land merits approval, not persecution.

"You have announced that you intend to be governor of all the people of Louisiana. We believe that in order to fulfill that pledge you must veto these bills which are manifestly designed to destroy the basic legal rights of a substantial minority of the people.

"We would appreciate an opportunity to discuss this legislation with you. May a delegation of our members meet with you at your convenience?"

Meanwhile opposition to a bill to ban all racially mixed athletics in Louisiana continued to mount over the state. Near-sighted pro-seg lobbyists in the state capitol refusing to see the effect of such a measure clamored for its passage.

However, the senate judiciary committee delayed final action in order to permit others to speak in opposition to the measure in a public hearing Tuesday.

Mrs. Teresa R. Charles Wiltz, a registered nurse, took exception to comments voiced by J. B. Easterly, head of the Southern Gentlemen group, in his attempt to have the bill passed.

Weekly P.3

Said she: "Hell, too, has a mixture of races and for such reason I disagree with you that your 'mamas and papas' recognition for all college and university teams."

Verdun Woods, an insurance man, said: "Just how far will our elected officials venture to insure the strangulation of the rights of the Negro down below."

Sept. 1-56

"With the aid of our National Government and our state, I personally know that integration of the races has continued successfully for over thirty years in a productive way right here in Louisiana, which is recognized and listed in the Registration Area. Then too, some of the 'White mamas and papas' have handed down to us before death, legal justice which we are now enjoying.

"What about trying to follow in the footsteps of our good White predecessors and help bring peace to the world?"

St. John Wigley, an automobile mechanic, said that favorable action on the bill is equivalent to a turncoat stand. And immediately wipes out all the vestiges of democracy and fair play. Such a measure would hasten the death of the New Orleans Pelicans, already being plagued by little or no Negro attendance, the Evangeline League, the Shreveport baseball team of the Texas League, and nagro population? I thought our state was flying the flag of our country . . . not a rose under a different name. It is more than obvious that the lack of Negro support of white sports activities throughout the South has caused the dissolution of quite a few organizations . . . certainly such a bill would increase the number.

"It is a pity that a Willie Mays or a Charlie Joseph have to leave home in order to get a democratic 'break' in their particular fields of sports . . . is this Southern decency?

"Perhaps the voting and buying power of the southern Negro does not give cause for alarm among the lily-white political machines, but time will be an important factor in this matter. Democracy will eventually fight its way into the impenetrable South, and the sentence will be pronounced on deserving heads."

James Garner, a student, stated: "This bill is an indication that diehards suffer ego complexes when Negro athletes outstar whites in competition and such occurrences deal setbacks to those promoting racial superiority. Obviously they are fearful that too many Jackie Robinsons will spring up causing many 'so-called' baseball players to seek other means of making a livelihood. If democracy had functioned the same in other sections of the United States as it does in the South, many top-named Negro athletes forced to leave their native South in quest of opportunity would never have been known."

School Integration Or Blood Integration-Which?

Weekly New Orleans La.

Sat. 7-14-56

By Marcus Christian

Poet, Writer and Historian. Unit Supervisor, Federal Writers' Project, 1939-42; Rosenwald Fellow, 1943-44; University Librarian, 1944-50.

Shortly after the Supreme Court's decision of 1954, two white men were talking together in a store just off Canal street. The blond, studious-looking clerk was saying to a darker white customer: "They're talking about integration, integration, but from the way I look at it integration has already been with us for some time." A few months later two bus conductors on a City Park bus were talking to each other. The driver had just made a remark concerning the handsome-looking colored girls who boarded his bus in the Orleans-Dumaine street section of the city. "Man!" said his co-worker, "talking about good-lookers! They got two of them who get on my bus about the same time every day, and I'm telling you they don't come any finer than that! They're as fine as they make 'em!"

Several years back a white Harvard-trained professor, teaching on the campus of a local Negro university, was heard to remark in admiration: "Frankly, I see a couple of them around here that I could go for myself!" The amusing thing about this situation was that quite a few of the co-eds—bright, brown and black—who attended his lectures, were just as frank in their statements that not one of them was willing to "go" for the prof. This, despite the fact that his family received flattering notice in the society columns of such newspapers as The New York Times.

The fact that we are attempting to stress here and in most of our articles is that for nearly two hundred and fifty years blood integration has been going on in this state between the high and the low of both races and that all of the laws enacted on the subject and penalties involved have failed to stop it. Further, many of the leading whites and Negroes who speak out against it or condemn it are themselves ensnared in this great circle of miscegenation and powerless to restrict it. Here the guilt-complexes of both groups manifest themselves in strange ways. For example, it is alleged that a Louisiana governor who took a leading part in the miscegenation drive of the early 1900s was himself the father of a colored family bearing his name. He and his administration made one of the most vicious drives against miscegenation ever recorded in the history of the state. Yet, forty years later we find scarcely a Negro among us who has not some degree of white blood, and in the meantime, Negroes and whites are still being charged with violating the anti-miscegenation laws first enacted during his tenure. Recently, Edwin R. Embree, writing a book about us, entitled it: "Brown Americans," but the diffusion of white blood is even more widespread than his title indicates. Recently, one of the heads of the Citizens Councils said to me: "Oh, I admit that some of the best white blood has passed over into the 'nigra' race." (And vice versa.)

I once sat in the pit of Jerusalem Temple's auditorium and, looking up for a moment into the balcony above, saw a veritable garden of colors in the faces of those above me. For once, a pride—not of race, but of being—swept over me at that flash of kaleidoscopic human coloring, the bright stage lights below reflected in their multi-hued faces and upon the rich clothing they wore. I half prayed that the whites below would only turn and look up, feeling sure that this sight would not be forgotten in a lifetime. Even a Dixiecrat would have been impressed! I thought of how colorless and prosaic the word, "melting-pot," seemed when placed beside this magic spectacle of beauty. Not the American melting-pot, but the American race-garden. A melting-pot of one color, one type, we never could be, but a racial garden we are already and will remain within the life-span of all now living.

Therefore, whether public school integration proves a success or failure at this point, a more subtle and intimate integration along blood lines will go on as effortlessly as the swing of a pendulum. Because the strongest natural force in all beings is the drive in a man for the woman he wants most and the drive in a woman for the man she loves best—all laws and taboos notwithstanding. This fact is ably illustrated in the scores of antebellum miscegenation cases in which the action of Negro slaves and free men and white men, women and girls make our so-called freedom of today seem ridiculous. There were literally scores of instances in which Negro slaves underwent lashings to be with white women of their choice in which free colored men were often jailed for living with white women; in which young white girls openly defied family, civil authority and friends to be with colored men of their choice; instances in which white men "went down the line" to jail, ostracism, and assorted taboos in order to be with the women they loved—whether those women were highly colored or colorless. All of these things happened within the confines of a slavocracy which was then the most autocratic ruling power on earth; a power which boasted that it, and it alone ruled the nation. There was Augustin F. Macarty, member of one of the oldest and distinguished white families, who served as Mayor of New Orleans on so many occasions that he declined further nomination. He lived with a free colored woman as her common-law husband for forty years, and in a church wedding married off one of his daughters to a Spaniard named Tio. He left his large fortune to his children and grandchildren, naming his son-in-law as universal legatee.

Now, in this modern day, the "little men of small repute" in our state capitol would rear up a great bastion of racial laws like the little men of Hitler's Germany. Have they forgotten so soon? They would go farther than anyone else has ever gone since the Ursulines first set up their inter-racial convent in 1727. They would ban interracial instruction for the first time on Louisiana soil. One of the outstanding provisions of the notorious Black Code of slavery days was that a slave who had served as tutor to his master's children was thereby automatically freed. But our modern lawmakers would proscribe this type of instruction. Even an utter fool can see the futility of telling a hungry white man that he must eat only the bread held out to him by white hands, or of telling a Negro child that he must eat of the bread of knowledge only at the feet of teachers of his own race. When any hunger is great enough the eyes are blind.

May the lawmakers at Baton Rouge, who are supposed to represent their Negro constituents as well, also realize that there are forces in life far stronger than prejudices, taboos and segregation laws, and that these forces, dammed today, may on the morrow gather the necessary power to wreck them one and all.

Senate Committee Okays Athletic Segregation Bill

Times-Picayune

New Orleans La.

BATON ROUGE, July 2 (AP)—A Senate committee Monday voted unanimous approval of a bill outlawing athletic contests in Louisiana between Negroes and whites.

Times 7-3-56

The action by Senate judiciary "A" committee cleared the way for a floor vote on the House-passed bill ~~later~~ this week. The bill passed the House without opposition.

The bill would prohibit "dancing, social functions, entertainments, athletic training, games, sports or contests and other such activities involving personal and social contacts in which the participants or contestants are members of the white and Negro races."

The measure further requires segregated seatings and "separate sanitary, drinking water and other facilities for members of the white and Negro races . . ."

Before committee action, Sen. W. M. Rainach, legislative segregation leader, amended the bill so that it would not take effect until Oct. 15.

This, Rainach said, would permit the Shreveport baseball team to complete the Texas league season. The Class AA baseball league has had Negro players for several seasons.

Sen. J. D. DeBlieux of Baton Rouge contended the bill would hurt the Louisiana State university athletic program.

Committee members complained that LSU had not come before the committee to oppose the bill, although the chairman of the LSU board of supervisors had been present last Tuesday when a public hearing was held.

DeBlieux also asked if the segregated seating requirement would affect the Negro students attending LSU's graduate schools under court order.

Sen. Rex McCullough of Lafayette also asked how it would affect Southwestern Louisiana Institute, where Negroes attend as undergraduates under federal court order.

"They may sit in the student section," Gibbs said, "provided the section is segregated. The Negro students can't sit with the white students."

Sen. Ted Hickey of New Orleans said this was the only segregation measure of the session he had been asked to oppose.

"I have been tormented by this one," he said, adding, "this would prohibit any major league exhibitions in New Orleans. It would hurt the Sugar Bowl and prevent Negro and white boxers from working out together."

The measure also would affect the Sugar Bowl athletic events. The Sugar Bowl ended segregated seating for the New Year's day football game at New Orleans in 1955 when Mississippi met Navy and last Jan. 1 Pittsburgh played the first Negro in Sugar Bowl history against Georgia Tech.

And Loyola of New Orleans has scheduled topflight teams from all sections for several years with no segregated seats in its field house. Last season, the New Orleans team played host to San Francisco with three Negro regulars.

Move Launched After U. S. Court Rules 'Police Power' Segregation Invalid

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 16 (AP).—A hot legislative fight was expected today between the Roman Catholic Church and segregation leaders seeking a law that would halt church plans for integration in Catholic schools.

Four State representatives asked last night for measures to prevent mixing races in private schools. The request came less than a month after Catholic Church officials said integration in their schools may come by September.

The four legislators were from the New Orleans area, where more than half of the school children attend Catholic schools.

The request came shortly after a special three-judge Federal court threw out State laws aimed at retaining segregation under the State's police powers.

Wording Was Revised

The law created a controversy when passed four years ago. The Louisiana House originally passed a bill banning integration in all schools, but later changed the wording to make the ban apply to public schools.

The revision came after Archbishop Joseph Rummel of New Orleans intervened and the question brought up the United States constitutional guarantee of separation of church and state.

The request last night came from Representatives Cyril Broussard, Joseph Casey and Frank Huerstel of New Orleans and E. W. Gravolet, jr., of adjacent Plaquemines Parish (county). It was made in a letter to State Senator W. M. Rainach, segregation leader in the Legislature.

They urged the 1954 laws be amended to include private schools.

Assail Integration

Their statement said, "It is unthinkable that the State of Louisiana would not afford the same protection to the children in its private schools that it affords to the children in its public schools."

They predicted the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People would try to force Negro children into white private schools. They said integration would be disastrous to both types of schools.

Mr. Rainach yesterday criticized the three-man court which gave yesterday's desegregation ruling and the Orleans Parish (county) School Board said the next step would be to appeal the ruling.

Mr. Rainach, who is head of the Legislature's Committee on Segregation, said the three judges "took an oath of office to uphold the Constitution of the United States, not an oath to uphold the palpably unconstitutional decision of the (United States Supreme Court) justices."

The court tossed out Louisiana segregation laws as unconstitutional.

In the wake of yesterday's decision, United States District Judge J. Skelly Wright ordered New Orleans to end racial segregation in its public schools "with all deliberate speed." He was quick to point out, however, that this did not mean the mixing of classes would come "overnight or even in a year or more."

Judge Wright directed the School Board to integrate classes "after such time as may be necessary to make arrangements for admission of children to such schools on a radically nondiscriminatory basis."

Mr. Rainach aimed his criticism at Judge Wright and his two fellow jurists, all natives of Louisiana. Judge Wayne G. Borah of the 5th Circuit and United States District Judge Herbert Christenberry shared in the ruling.

Words of Caution

Judge Wright cautioned that "the problem of changing a people's mores, particularly those with an emotional overlay, is not to be taken lightly."

He said the problem would require "the utmost patience, understanding, generosity and forbearance from all of us whatsover."

p. 4-A

After the Supreme Court decision in 1954 abolishing segregation in public schools, the Legislature passed a series of laws placing segregated schools under the State's inherent police powers.

One of the measures ordered separate white and Negro schools "to promote and protect public health, morals, better education and the peace and good order of the State."

But the District Court ruled that the laws were unconstitutional.

N.O. Archbishop Hits Segregation as 'Sinful'

Constitution p. 3
Atlanta, Ga.

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 19 (AP)—Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel in a strongly worded pastoral letter today denounced racial segregations as "morally wrong and sinful" and gave clear indication he intends to integrate New Orleans parochial schools.

His letter was read at all Masses in all churches throughout the archdiocese, largest in the Deep South with a Catholic population of 524,157. About 25 per cent are Negroes.

C/Post, 2-20.56

It was the first time New Orleans Catholics heard integration plans discussed in a public letter from the archbishop. The reading at most churches commanded rapt attention.

Archdiocesan spokesmen previously have announced that plans are under way to integrate the Catholic schools sometime after 1956, but this was the archbishop's first public denunciation of segregation as a sin.

The New Orleans parochial school system is the state's largest single school unit. New Orleans is one of the few cities in the country where more children attend parochial than public schools.

Archbishop Rummel did not say when integration would come but pleaded "that the decision when made will be accepted in the spirit of Christian charity and justice.

"This is a problem which should be worked out not in an atmosphere of wrangling or contention or discord or hatred but in a spirit of conciliation and with a desire to achieve peace through justice and charity."

He said the plans are still under study.

The New Orleans public school system is already under U.S. District Court order to begin carrying out the 1954 U.S. Supreme Court decision ending public school segregation.

The court order came Wednesday after a special three-man federal court declared all Louisiana school segregation laws unconstitutional.

RACE LAW WON'T INTERFERE, VIEW

Legislators Assert Canon Doesn't Cover Proposal

Three state legislators Sunday declared proposed legislation to bring private schools under state segregation laws does not come within the purview of the Canon cited in the last issue of Catholic Action of the South as basis for automatic excommunication from the Catholic Church.

New Orleans, La.

The editorial by M. F. Everett, which had the approval of Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel, said that Catholics who work for and vote for passage of state laws that would interfere with the operation of Catholic schools might incur automatic excommunication.

The editorial was in connection with previously announced plans of a four man-group, headed by Rep. E. W. Gravolet Jr., Plaquemines parish, to propose legislation to bring private schools under the state's segregation laws.

'Explanation of One Man'

Rep. Joseph S. Casey, New Orleans, said he was joined in the statement Sunday criticizing the editorial by Rep. Frank X. "Mike" Huerstel, New Orleans, and Gravolet. Casey and Huerstel, members of the four-man group, were defeated in their bid for re-election. Gravolet was re-elected.

Their statement said, "the Catholic Church has not required and does not require integration under penalty of censure" and that the interpretation of the Canon in the editorial "is the explanation of one man who seeks first integration and not the free exercise of religion towards which the Canon of the Church is directed."

The statement said "the legislation proposed is intended to accord to the children attending private schools the same protection as those attending public schools."

Joint Statement

The joint statement said:

"We have read with dismay and deep concern the editorial by Mr. M. F. Everett in the February 26 issue of Catholic Action, wherein he states that proposed legislative measures by the undersigned threatened the rights of the Catholic Church and that for Catholic legislators excommunication latae sententiae could result. The proposed legislation would preserve and maintain racial segregation in the private schools as well as in the public schools. Mr. Everett, as his authority uses Canon 2334 which reads as follows: "The following incur an excommunication latae sententiae especially reserved to the Holy See: 1. Those who issue laws, mandates, or decrees contrary to the freedom or rights of the Church; 2. Those who directly or indirectly impede the exercise of ecclesiastical jurisdiction either of the internal or of the external forum, and for this purpose have recourse to any lay authority."

Times-Picayune

"In his encyclical on Christian Education of Youth, Pope Pius XI sets forth the rights and duties of the church, the family and the state with respect to Christian Education, from which in part Mr. Everett quotes at length. It is obvious from the encyclical that the proposed legislation does not in any manner impede the Church in the free and full exercise of the education of youth. It follows therefore that Canon 2334 is not applicable, so obviously the mention of excommunication by Mr. Everett is more of an unfounded threat than a proven fact. Legislation that would require the separation of the races in a school would not in any manner prevent the Church from educating Negroes just as she educates whites — the education can be identical despite the fact that the races may be under separate roofs.

"Mr. Everett would give the impression that we would legislate the Catholic schools out of existence, whereas the legislation proposed is intended to accord to children attending private schools the same protection as those attending public schools.

"We are amazed to read Mr. Everett's statement that 'control of education of youth and suppression of religious activities have always been among the first steps toward a dictator state.' There is absolutely no relationship whatsoever between this statement of Mr. Everett and the proposed legislation.

"With reference to Canon 2334 suffice it to say that the proposed legislation does not come within the purview of said Canon. Firstly, it is not a law or decree contrary to the freedom of the rights of the Church; secondly, the proposed legislation in no way impedes the Church in the exercise of its ecclesiastical jursdiction with respect to education. If the proposed legislation became law it would not interfere with the freedom of the Church to educate nor the rights of individuals to receive a Catholic education. Certainly the Church as it has in the past and as it does presently, may educate the races separately and continue to conduct separate schools for both the white and colored alike. The Church has not been impeded nor hindered in the free exercise of its teachings nor the conduct of its parochial school system, yet to date it has maintained its schools with the races separated. The proposed legislation intends to maintain the system in its present form.

"The legislation and the proponents thereof have no intention to enter into a further public debate or discussion with Mr. Everett or with the hierarchy if he represents their point of view, but suffice it to say that it will in no way interfere with the freedom of the church but only to maintain the social regulations as they presently exist within the state, under the police power of the state to protect all of its citizens. It should not be denied that when state laws are not in opposition to or conflict with the free exercise of the church to educate, the hierarchy should then recognize the state laws and co-operate with civil authority.

"The compulsory integration of the races in the private schools could not under existing conditions promote the common good but to the contrary would lead to a state of unrest, disorder, would not be conducive to the best interest of either race and under the circumstances it is incumbent upon the state to protect its present way of life.

"The editorial states that the 'proposed laws . . . would be the first step toward serious interference with the operation' of private schools and would force a 'standardized education in private as well as in public schools.' This we deny most emphatically. It is merely an assumption on the part of the writer of the editorial. This is not an attempt at standardization of a school system and the editorial writer should be reminded that the church has already submitted to and acquiesced in laws standardizing transportation of children, lunch programs, qualification of teachers, compulsory attendance of students, regulations of the fire marshal and the board of health, all laws for the common good and general welfare.

"Were former legislators and law-makers subjected to a threat of excommunication for passing such laws without being apprised of their interference with the freedom of education by the church? Why now should legislators be so threatened because, as has been demonstrated, there has been no attempt whatsoever to impede or in any way interfere.

"It cannot be denied that the Catholic church has not and does not require integration under penalty of censure and that the interpretation of Canon 2334 as appears in the editorial is the explanation of one man who seeks first integration and not the free exercise of religion towards which the Canon of the church is directed.

"We cannot close this statement without the observation that the editorial is most injudicious, imprudent and untimely, coming as it does with the approval of the archbishop and in our estimation contrary to the best interests of the Catholic church."

RACE ISSUE MAY AID REDS, SAYS RUMMEL

Urges Pro-Segregationists Consider Effects

Mon. 2-27-56

Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel said Sunday that pro-segregationists may be "doing the work of those striving to introduce the principles . . . of Communism into the United States." P. 1

Addressing a non-segregated group of an estimated 850 at eighth annual Catholic Interracial Sunday observances in the Holy Name of Jesus school auditorium, Archbishop Rummel said:

"Sometimes I wonder who is doing the work of the Communists . . . whether it is we who assert the rights of all the citizens or whether it is those who are striving to maintain segregation."

New Orleans, La.

The archbishop went on:

"I think it would be well for the gentlemen loudest in their advocacy of continued segregation, contrary to the Supreme Court and the district courts, to ask themselves whether or not they are really acting as genuine Americans or whether they are doing the work of those striving to introduce the principles of atheism and infidelity and the principles of communism into the United States."

Archbishop Rummel's remarks constituted the third major Catholic pronouncement on segregation in eight days. A week ago Sunday he denounced segregation in a pastoral letter read from the pulpits of the Catholic churches of the archdiocese of New Orleans.

Last Friday the Catholic Action of the South, official Catholic newspaper of the archdiocese, published an editorial suggesting that legislators preparing laws calculated to continue segregation in Catholic schools might face automatic excommunication.

'True Principles Involved'

Sunday the archbishop continued his attack on segregation and indicated the campaign will continue.

"Catholics," he said in his remarks delivered extemporaneously, "have reached a state of obstinacy which makes them almost repudiate . . . the true principles involved."

He urged Catholics to "strive to accept the teachings of the Church" and said Catholic doctrine will be "exposed more in days to come."

The archbishop spoke at a program presented by the Southeastern Regional Inter-racial Commission of the National Federation of Catholic College Students.

Principal speaker was Hulan E. Jack, president of the borough of Manhattan in New York city, "the highest elective office ever attained by a Negro in the history of the United States," according to Jack.

At the outset of his address, Jack hailed what he termed the "courageous leadership" of the archbishop and said the archbishop has "stimulated the admiration of every right-thinking citizen in every corner of our country."

Times-Picayune

Recounting his birth 49 years ago in the British West Indies and of his coming to the United States at the age of 16, Jack said his election to the presidency of Manhattan was a "practical demonstration of democracy in action which the Communists can never challenge." P. 16

He recalled that for 13 consecutive years he served as a legislator in the New York state assembly in Albany.

'No Man Born with Prejudice'

"I believed then, as I do now," he continued, "that no man is free if all men are not free and that no one was ever born with a single grain of prejudice in his heart and soul."

He noted that on last Wednesday, Washington's Birthday, he led the annual Knights of Columbus parade up New York's Fifth ave. as grand marshal. This, he said, was proof "that it is possible for all people to dwell side by side as friendly neighbors."

"Are the opponents of equality in education sincere when they attempt to declare that the Bible is wrong, that the Vatican is wrong, that the three Southern members of the United States supreme court are also wrong in asserting that all men are children of God and born with the status of equality?" he asked.

Jack contended that when "tax-collected money is used for the purposes of inequality in any form," then the government has denied all citizens equal rights. "It is also a contradiction of our principles of American democracy and definitely furnishes ammunition for the propaganda guns of Communism," he said.

Jack said the entire world is watching the developments of the segregation issue in the United States.

"We cannot afford to disappoint them (the other nations) in their search for freedom, justice and equality for if we do so, the ugly forces of Communism will have gained a substantial victory."

Question-Answer Session

In a question-answer session following his address, Jack was asked whether integration has furthered intermarriage.

Not "on any large scale" in New York city, he replied. "Integration is not being sought for the purpose of intermarriage . . . people tend to gravitate among themselves."

On the subject of legislation to circumvent the US Supreme Court decisions, Jack said: "I know of no state that will be proud of a history of being in violation of the law."

"The greatest thing that has happened in the South," he went on, "is that for the first time the Negro has made it his business to stand up and say, 'I am an equal citizen and entitled to the same rights guaranteed by the Constitution.' "

He concluded by calling on Negroes to continue the move for integration but warned them, "Don't be bitter. Don't be belligerent or you may find yourselves in a position of being criticized."

Turning to face Archbishop Rummel, he said:

"Your work during the week has brought new hope and new courage to all parts of the United States."

The archbishop said Jack was "far too generous" in his praise. The archbishop then went on to praise Jack.

He also said that "We have received a great deal of attention from the press . . . throughout the world" in the last three months but that some of the messages have expressed the opinion that segregation in the United States in particular was inconsistent with the democratic way of life. "That's deplorable," said the archbishop.

Panel Discussion

The size of the audience was estimated by Donald Nicodemus, chairman of the program and president of the regional commission. Nicodemus further estimated that of the 850 in attendance, 20 to 25 per cent was white.

Preceding the addresses were five panel discussions on Catholic college integration, Catholic high school integration, parochial elementary school integration, integration of school athletics and integration of parish societies.

In the panel on college integration, Ernest Thomas, president of the student body at Xavier university, said integration will come eventually through "educational processes." Ollie Porche, a junior at Sacred Heart college, Grand Coteau, related how Negro students have integrated without incident in that institution.

The Rev. Vincent Miceli of Spring Hill college, Mobile, Ala., and formerly of the faculty at St. John's High school in Shreveport, said the supreme court decision was a "social action," a "breakthrough." He urged Catholics to challenge arguments for segregation.

In the elementary school integration panel, Winter Trapolin, New Orleans insurance man, said: "When we're dealing with emotion, we've got to approach it slowly . . . the children will integrate simply into the schools." He called for a program of gradual integration.

Integration of school athletics was discussed by Elliot Willard, head basketball coach and assistant football coach at Xavier Preparatory school. It is the responsibility of the parents to encourage integration on the playing fields, he said. "They (the parents) had better recognize the authority of the archbishop," he said.

Insofar as integration of parish societies is concerned, John P. Nelson Jr., New Orleans attorney, said: "There is no such thing as a private Catholic organization" in the meaning that it can establish its own rules. He said parish societies can help bring together the two races inasmuch as such societies "provide the only opportunity outside the church for getting acquainted."

Archbishop Rummel Flay Segregation

Archbishop Joseph Francis Rummel Sunday denounced racial segregation as "morally wrong and sinful," and indicated that he will order integration of New Orleans parochial schools.

His strongly worded pastoral letter was read at all masses in churches throughout the archdiocese, largest in the Deep South. The reading at most churches commanded rapt attention.

Archbishop Rummel said racial segregation "is morally wrong and sinful because it is a denial of the unity and solidarity of the human race as conceived by God in the creation of man in Adam and Eve."

He did not say when integration would come, but pleaded that "the decision when made will be accepted in the spirit of Christian charity and justice. . .

"This is a problem which should be worked out not in an atmosphere of wrangling or contention or discord or hatred, but in a spirit of conciliation and with a desire to achieve peace through justice and charity."

Archdiocesan spokesmen recently announced that Catholic schools would be integrated some time in 1956, but this was the archbishop's first public denunciation of segregation as a sin.

The New Orleans archdiocese has a Catholic population of 524,-157, about 25 percent of whom are Negroes.

The New Orleans parochial school system is the state's largest single school unit. The city is one of the few in the country where more children attend parochial than public school.

At present, the New Orleans public school system is under federal District Court order to begin carrying out the Supreme Court's desegregation decree.

The Archbishop's letter in part said, difficult indeed is the approach to a propitious solution according to Christian principles of justice and charity of the problem of racial integration in our schools, especially in the Deep South where for more than a century and a half segregation has been accepted without serious question or challenge.

For months we have prayed, studied and consulted about the cause it is a denial of the unity and solidarity of the human race as conceived by God in the creation of man in Adam and Eve. . .

2. Racial segregation is morally wrong and sinful because it is a denial of the unity and universality of the Redemption. . .

3. Racial segregation is morally wrong and sinful because it is basically a violation of the dictates of justice and the mandate of love, which is obedience to problem with a sense of our responsibility for the welfare of all souls that constitutes the spiritual family for which in virtue of our office as Archbishop we are responsible before God. With an appeal to the Holy Spirit we now submit for careful consideration the following results, especially regarding the moral difficulties which segregation presents.

1. Racial segregation as such is morally wrong and sinful be- God's will must regulate the relations between all men. To deny to members of a certain race, just because they are members of that race, certain rights and opportunities, civic or economic, educational or religious, recreational or social, imposes upon them definite hardships and humiliations, frustrations and impediments to progress which condemn them to perpetual degradation which is only a step removed from slavery. Such indignities are grievous violations of Christian justic and charity, which cannot be justi- lations of Christian justice and fied in this modern age of enlightenment and loudly proclaimed de- mo-

4. Because the emancipation during the War between the States involved certain physical and economic hardships, Racial segregation was regarded with toleration but never justifiable as a permanent racial adjustment. Even the Catholic church considered it wise and necessary to give separate church and school facilities to Negroes to afford them the opportunity to practice their faith more freely and educate their children more fully than was often possible in mixed congregations, but this arrangement was never intended to be permanent. This is attested by Most Reverend Archbishop Francis Janssens, D.D. who initiated the program with the remark that he did so very reluctantly and in the hope that it would be possible after a brief period to have all Catholics worship under the same roof. . .

We come now to the reasons for segregation at least in the school. These reasons are for the most part unwarranted generalizations in which it is aimed to give the impression that all members of the Negro race and especially all Negro children are tainted with virtually all the alleged defects. The amazing fact is that "as a race" they are not still more generally lacking in mental ability, culture, moral self-control, immunity from social diseases, criminal propensities, etc., when you consider the neglect and barriers to which they have been exposed in education, general culture, economic opportunities, respectable housing facilities, contact with stable social institutions and the more dignified ways of life. Although living and moving in the maelstrom of city or rural life, the laws and customs built up around the mystic term "segregation" have practically relegated Negroes to an island-like existence. They emerge to work, toil and serve even in the intimacy of the white home and family, but "segregation" cuts off the free avenues to progress in the better things of life that are synonymous with Christian civilization. This condition in itself is an indictment against continuing segregation 'indefinitely' as its advocates envision. . .

Hence, we plead with all of you for perseverance in prayer in order that the final decision may be in conformity with the will of Christ and the highest interest of souls according to the mind of Holy Mother Church. May we likewise unite in prayer that the decision, when made, will be accepted in the spirit of Christian charity and justice and in that unity of mind, heart and will which must always characterize the family of God. This is a problem which should be worked out not in an atmosphere of wrangling or contention or discord or hatred but in a spirit of conciliation and with a desire to achieve peace through justice and charity.

Pro-Segregation Legislators Are Hit Again By CAS

A statement by three Louisiana men who advocate new laws making segregation mandatory for private schools in the state was termed "unfortunate in its implications and fallacious in its conclusions," in probing front-page editorial by M. F. Everett in last week's edition of Catholic Action of the South.

The editorial crystalized that such action "places the men in the position of deciding what is best for the Catholic Church—laymen usurping the functions of theologians, cannonists, administrators, and teachers of the Church."

The editorial was a follow-up of one of the previous week in which it clearly pointed out that lay interference with ecclesiastical jurisdiction would lead to ex communication by the church. The state legislators who took issue with the editorial on ex-communication were Joseph S. Casey, and Frank X. Huerstel, both of Orleans and recently defeated in election run-offs and E. W. Gravolet, Jr., Plaquemines.

The thought-provoking editorial declared: "The Church, established to lead all men to heaven, sees no distinction of color or other accident among them as children of God. As St. Paul wrote: 'There is neither Jew nor Greek; there is neither bond nor free; there is neither male nor female. For you are all one in Christ Jesus.' . . .

"The proponents of the new laws revert to the theory of 'separate but equal facilities' in attempting to prove that Catholic education can be carried on separately according to race. This theory, adopted temporarily to meet a specific situation, was thrown out by the US Supreme Court in its historic decision of May 17, 1954.

"Human beings are social creatures made to live together for the common good. 'Separate but equal' is contrary to human needs, democratic justice and Christian ideals. People cannot work together, live in the same community, and be separated by artificial barriers. A device that submerges one group defeats human brotherhood and cannot continue indefinitely without hurting all groups."

Concerning segregation presently in force, the editorial took the view: "Segregation was never at any time favored by the Church. It has been reluctantly tolerated in this country simply to avoid the possibility of a greater evil. The Church's teaching on integration is clear. It is the grave obligation of every Ordinary (head of a diocese) to determine by practical judgment when the teaching of the Church can and should be put into effect for the good of souls. It should be obvious to anyone reading the pastoral letters of Archbishop Joseph F. Rummel of New Orleans particularly the one printed in this paper last week, that he regards most seriously his duty of care of souls and is making every effort to arrive at a solution in the spirit of Christian justice and charity and in the unity and peace Christ asked of His followers."

The editorial said that prophesized statement that chaos would follow integration is without foundation "in face of proven experience. Integration has been affected in both private and public schools in many districts of the south, largely without incident. The only incidents that have occurred were due to emotion and strife stirred up by misguided zealots. Even in Louisiana there has been integration in both state and private colleges and universities without incident or excitement."

It explained that Church "recognize state laws and cooperate with civil authority. . . . The proposed laws, however, are not only unjust but are invalid before they are even passed."

Police power does not wipe out the stigma attached to the proposed laws, the editorial noted.

In conclusion the soul-searching article added:

"We do not suggest that the proponents of the laws under discussion wish directly to interfere with the operation of the Church and her schools or that they are looking toward a dictator state. We insist that legislation of this nature could be the first step toward domination of religion by the state and even toward totalitarianism if the precedent they would set were allowed to stand and if it were seized upon by completely unscrupulous political leaders as the basis for further steps. This procedure has been followed elsewhere, and it can happen here if the rights of religion can be violated with impunity."

Bills Permit Firing Teachers Favoring Integration

Fri. 6-22-56

BATON ROUGE, June 21 (AP) — The Louisiana Senate, without debate or opposition Thursday voted final legislative passage to four bills to permit firing of teachers who advocate racial integration.

The bills now go to Gov. Earl Long for his signature.

The four proposals involving teacher tenure are the last major items of a 12-measure legislative program sponsored by the joint legislative segregation committee.

Preventions Cited

They would prevent teachers, statewide and in New Orleans, school bus drivers and other school employes from:

1. Belonging or contributing to groups like the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, now outlawed in Louisiana under a state court injunction.

2. Advocating or helping to bring about integration in public schools or state colleges.

Gov. Long Wednesday signed two segregation bills passed by the Legislature which would place segregation in recreation and parks under the state's police power and require certificates of moral character and eligibility from school principals and superintendents for applicants to colleges and universities.

Other segregation proposals passed by the Legislature include:

1. An interposition resolution declaring the US Supreme Court segregation decisions in violation of the Constitution.

2. A resolution re-establishing the segregation committee, set up as a "watch dog" group after the 1954 Supreme Court school decision.

3. A constitutional amendment which would force legislative approval of integration suits filed against local school boards, recreation and parks commissions and other state and local agencies.

4. A legislative act ending compulsory school attendance if schools are forced to integrate.

5. A legislative act requiring segregation in travel waiting rooms.

Dispute Over Mardi Gras

NEW ORLEANS, Feb. 3 (UP) —A California band canceled today its trip to the Mardi Gras spectacle because its two Negro members would not be allowed to perform with the whites.

The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People sought to prevent the holding of the boisterous Zulu king parade, the big carnival event for Negroes, unless it was "toned up."

Gordon Carmen, director of the Long Beach, Calif., Marching Band, said he had rejected an invitation for the group to appear in the parade of King Rex after a carnival official had tol dhim that the Negroes could participate only in the Zulu parade.

Clarence Laws, field secretary for the N. A. A. C. P. said the Zulu parade had been "degrading and depressing" in past years.

De Blanc Asks Veto for Sports Association

New Orleans, La.

Telegrams urging Gov. Earl K Long to sign into law HB1412 which prohibits interracial social and sports activities, were sent to the governor Saturday following a request of the New Orleans Mid Winter Sports Association that he veto the bill.

Sponsors of the two telegrams were Dr. Emmett L. Irwin, chairman of the Citizens' Council of New Orleans, and Harry P. Gamble Sr., president of the Association of the Preservation of State Government and Social Integrity.

The Sugar Bowlers in their veto appeal said that the status of the Sugar Bowl football and basketball classics would be seriously affected and such outstanding teams as Army, Navy, Notre Dame and Kentucky would be excluded from the competition if the bill becomes law.

In a supplementary statement issued Saturday afternoon, Paul DeBlanc, president of the Mid-Winter Sports Association, said that the association opposes the bill because it recognizes "an obligation to do whatever is possible to preserve the ideals of American sportsmanship."

DeBlanc said, too, that the bill would bar all of the athletes of the state's universities "from the Olympic games and all national collegiate championships."

Deadline for vetoing of bills by Gov. Long is Sunday. If he does not veto a measure by that time, it automatically becomes law.

Dr. Irwin's telegram to the governor said:

"As chairman of the Citizens Council of New Orleans, representing some 40,000 citizens, urgently request you sign into law House Bill 1412, which passed House and Senate without a dissenting vote. The people of Louisiana want this law insuring separation of the races for it is the heart of the entire plan of all segregation measures passed by the recent Legislature. It is by far the most momentous and valuable accomplishment of this session of the Legislature.

"Am sure your check will show untrue the last minute statement of the bowl group that they have always "segregated its stands." Real motivating powers behind bowl group are integrationists. The Senate committee twice postponed action on this bill so any and all opponents might be heard and not one person appeared.

"This law is most important for both white and Negro races. Urgently request your approval.

Gamble's telegram reads as follows:

Times-Picayune

"The morning press reports that at what appears to have been a hurriedly called special meeting of the executive committee of the New Orleans Mid-Winter Sports Association last night, a request was made of you in substance to veto HB 1412, prohibiting social and athletic integration, passed unanimously along with other bills which you have approved establishing a segregation pattern for Louisiana.

"This, you and the Legislature have done, we are sure, in the sincere belief that this is in the best interest of maintaining good relations between the races and continuing the progress which has been made by Negroes on their own. The committee requests you to make an exception in this pattern and lend your endorsement to social as well as sports integration.

"You are no doubt aware of certain undercover influences interested only in making money, regardless of the effect on our already too tense racial situation promoted by outsiders. A man of your experience in life with your fellow citizens, political and otherwise, well knows what these Mid-Winter sportsmen seem to ignore; namely, that to use their only phrase, taking rails off the fence one at a time finally lowers it to where stock of every breed have access.

"We raise no objection to integrated social and sports activities in the North, but they are hell-bent on regulating ours. And the committee's request to integrate can only lend support to their effort to impose their will on us. We urge you to go along with the Legislature and refuse this suspiciously belated request of the executive committee whose names do not appear in support of this camel's-head in the tent move."

DeBlanc Statement

Meanwhile, president Paul DeBlanc, of the New Orleans Mid-winter Sports Association, Saturday pointed out the obligations that prompted the Sugar Bowl's action in asking Gov. Long to veto the bill.

"We recognize an obligation to do whatever is possible to preserve the ideals of American sportsmanship," he said.

"We desire for the good of our state to continue the high standard of our Mid-Winter program: To keep it as an event of national significance.

"We feel duty bound to guard the interests of the 11,000 men and women bondholders who have invested $1,250,000 to enlarge the Tulane Sugar Bowl Stadium.

Joins Stand

"We believe we have an obligation, as citizens to lend our support to Louisiana State university, Tulane and Loyola of the South, all great educational institutions to the end that they be permitted to conduct their athletic programs without interference.

"This bill would bar all of the athletes of these universities from the Olympic games and all national collegiate championships.

"We believe these are good and valid reasons for our appeal to Gov. Long to veto this bill.

Long Asked Calmness

"Gov. Long, asked by the press on June 17 for comment on the bill had this to say:

"'I wish the people would be calm and not too hasty about these things. They might learn too late how far-reaching the effects would be.'

"With this statement of our governor we are in hearty agreement. This bill, if signed, will indeed have far reaching effects. All bad."

Explaining why the Sugar Bowl had not entered protest against the measure when it was before the Legislature, DeBlanc said that it had been inconceivable to him and his associates that such a bill would be passed.

LOUISIANA NEGROES MAY CONTEST LAW

Commercial Appeal 8-20

It Requires College Students Get Recommendation

Memphis, Tenn.

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 18. —A weekly Louisiana Negro newspaper Saturday said a new law requiring college students to obtain certificates attesting to moral character will be contested in court.

The News-Leader, published in Baton Rouge, said in an editorial entitled "You Choke on Your Own Hate," said, however, Negroes may not contest immediately the law banning racially mixed athletic events.

"Negro leaders say the law deprives us of nothing and on the other hand serves as a sharp reminder that segregation is a two-edged sword whose bite can be painful and costly," the editorial said.

The 1956 Legislature passed a law requiring all college students to get certificates of eligibility from their high school principals and superintendents.

Pro-segregation leaders said another 1956 law would place in jeopardy the jobs of principals and superintendents who signed certificates for Negroes to enter white colleges.

The law banning mixed athletic events will prevent the New Orleans Sugar Bowl from inviting Negro teams to any of its events.

Three out-of-state teams already have dropped out of the Sugar Bowl tournament because of the law.

News-Leader editor Leslie Barnum is a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, and has been active in fighting segregation policies of Louisiana.

Louisiana Law May Be Delay By Legislature

Advertiser 8-22-56

News, 8-25-56

Montgomery, Ala.

BATON ROUGE, La., Aug. 22 (AP) —The Louisiana Legislature may be called into special session to suspend effectiveness of a new law banning interracial athletics, a source close to the governor said today.

The source said if the special session is called, it would be asked to approve the delay so the law would not hit the Sugar Bowl athletic events.

The law, which is scheduled to go into effect Oct. 15, has caused three teams to drop out of the Sugar Bowl Basketball Tournament, leaving only Kentucky.

Pittsburgh, which brought the first Negro player to the Sugar Bowl last Jan. 2, already has rejected any possible repeat bids to the football game, basing the rejection on the new law.

In New Orleans, Paul DeBlanc, president of the Midwinter Sports Assn., Sugar Bowl sponsor, said, if the law was suspended, Notre Dame, St. Louis and Dayton, which dropped out of the basketball tournament, may be invited again.

Avoid violence, Sen. Ellender warns South

Sun. 3-18-56
P. 7

WASHINGTON, March 17—(AP)—A Southern senator cautioned his people Saturday night to avoid any show of violence in resisting school integration lest they invite a return of "reconstruction" government and rule by "carpetbaggers."

Sen. Ellender (D., La.) told a Louisiana radio audience in an address recorded in Washington that he and other congressional signers of last Sunday's "manifesto" against integration are committed to resistance by "any lawful means." He added:

"What the South must avoid at all costs is violence, lawlessness, hatred and bloodshed. The outside agitators who seek the subjugation of both the white and Negro races in the South are hovering like greedy vultures for the time when racial antagonisms lead to chaos, the breakdown of governmental authority and general lawlessness.

South would suffer

"IF THIS CONDITION should occur, then I fear they will not hesitate to press for the use of force. If this should occur, then all our people could look forward to would be a repetition of the reconstruction regimes which brought the South only oppression and self-seeking exploitation."

In "our fight to maintain the basic principle of our federal constitutional system," Ellender said, "we must not open our gates to an invasion of our states by a new and even hungrier breed of carpetbaggers."

Carpetbaggers were Northern politicians who invaded the South after the Civil War.

By the Supreme Court decision calling for desegregation of the public schools, Ellender said, "Nine men have made it possible for 165 million Americans to be made subject to a new and powerful kind of despotism."

The "declaration of constitutional principles" signed by the Southern congressmen, he said, "is a sober warning" to the American people that the Supreme Court "has laid the foundation for what may yet prove to be a complete destruction of our constitutional system of checks and balances."

Notice served

"WE HAVE served notice that the people of the South, both white and Negro, are not going to be used as either whipping boys or political pawns in order to fulfill the Supreme Court's new doctrine of sociological justice," Ellender declared.

He added that the South has been invaded by "unprincipled, self-seeking, outside agitators—I refer primarily to the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People)."

Up until the Supreme Court decision and this invasion, Ellender added, "relationships between the white and Negro races had been constantly improving."

LUMBEE INDIAN (NEW TRIBE) ROVESON COUNTY, NORTH CAROLINA

New Tribe of Indians Is Approved by Senate

Times p 33-C
Tues. 5-22-56

WASHINGTON, May 21 (UP)—The Senate voted today to create a new Indian tribe.

It decided unanimously that some 4,000 Indians around Robeson County, N. C., should be known officially as the Lumbee Indians. They are descendants of early English settlers and coastal Indians.

Some historical speculation in North Carolina links the Robeson County Indians with Sir Walter Raleigh's Lost Colony, the first English settlement in North America, which vanished in 1584.

The bill now goes back to the house for concurrence in a Senate amendment. This stipulates that the Indians' new status will not get them anything from the Government.

Kefauver explains snub of 'manifesto'

Afro-American p. 5 Sat 4-28-56 Baltimore, Md.

NASHVILLE, Tenn.—"My position may have cost some political support in the South, but I think it is right, and that is that."

This declaration of Sen Estes Kefauver was made while he was here late last week resting from his strenuous campaign for the Democratic party presidential nomination.

He said that the Supreme Court segregation ruling is "the law of the land" and must be obeyed. He referred specifically to his refusal to sign the "southern manifesto" against the court decision.

TWO OTHER southerners who refused to sign were Sen. Albert Gore, Tenn., and Sen. Lyndon B. Johnson, Texas, Senate majority leader.

Senator Kefauver said the manifesto "can only result in increased bitterness and hard feelings and add confusion to an already difficult situation.

"It is important that the issue be kept in calm, intelligent hands," he said

NONE OF THE city's 6,000 colored voters was invited to the reception in his honor, but the Tennesseean shook hands with all he met, including bellhops and elevator operators.

Doesn't Believe Supreme Court Exceeded Power

Wed. 3-14-56

CHICAGO, March 13.—(UP)—Adlai E. Stevenson disagreed with the recent segregation manifesto of Southern congressmen Tuesday, declaring he does not believe the United States Supreme Court exceeded its "proper authority" in the controversial school case.

Mr. Stevenson issued a statement which said the nation "must proceed along the course" charted by the high court.

"I do not agree that the Supreme Court exceeded its proper authority in its rulings on school segregation," the Democratic presidential hopeful said.

"I think rather that these rulings are correct interpretations of the Constitution and the conscience of the nation," he said.

Ninety-six Southern senators and representatives last Saturday signed a proclamation condemning the "unwarranted exercise of power" by the Supreme Court in the case. Since then more have signed.

Mr. Stevenson said the fact that the list of signers included "distinguished, responsible leaders of a great region of our country is a reflection of the gravity of the racial tensions that have arisen in the South."

He also said "It is very important to recognize that these Southern leaders urge that violence and extreme measures be avoided."

Mr. Stevenson said it is his own belief that differences in the South can be resolved through legal processes.

Stevenson Denounces Mob Violence in Dixie

Inquirer P. 3

Sat. 3-3-56

Ties Civil Rights To U.S. Security

Philadelphia

MINNEAPOLIS, March 2 (AP). Adlai E. Stevenson told a University of Minnesota audience today that the Nation could not ever be secure until the liberties of every individual were secure.

He came to Minnesota for a five-day campaign for Minnesota's delegates to the Democratic national convention. He will contest with Sen. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn.) in the State's March 20 Presidential primary.

DEPLORES 'CONFUSION'

In his prepared talk at the university, Stevenson discussed civil rights and assailed "confusion and contradiction" in the Eisenhower Administration's foreign policy.

The former Illinois Governor said civil rights were "a matter of grave national concern when a girl in Alabama is denied her constitutional rights by mob violence or subterfuge, or when murder goes unpunished in Mississippi, or when American citizens are denied peaceful occupancy of their homes in my own State of Illinois."

REBUKE TO NORTH

"Before we cast a stone at Alabama," he continued, "it might be well for those of us who live in some of the great northern cities to ask ourselves in candor how the Negro minority is faring in our own communities."

He said progress was being made toward reduction of race prejudice, but less "in reducing the unreasoning fear which has stampeded so many Americans into demanding the denial of the essential liberties of many of our fellow citizens as a necessary safeguard against subversion."

KEFAUVER BLASTS GOP

HANOVER, N. H., March 2 (AP). — Denouncing the Republican Party's domestic and foreign programs as failures, Sen. Estes Kefauver (D., Tenn) said tonight the Eisenhower Administration was responsible for "one of the darkest periods of American governmental history."

"With its methods of propaganda, procrastination and postponement, it has waited until its final year in office, and under the pressure of the coming election, before pretending to fulfill its campaign promises," Kefauver said.

In an address to a Dartmouth College political affairs conference, the tall Tennesseean said "disorder and irresponsibility" would "wreck the Federal Government" if the GOP won next November.

The tall Tennessean, seeking another triumph in New Hampshire's Presidential primary a week from Tuesday, visited five factories here today—the second day of a five-day campaign swing.

In Trenton, N. J., the president of the Kefauver for President Club, Martin J. Rafferty, formally entered Kefauver in that State's April 17 preferential primary. Rafferty predicted the Tennessee Senator would do "exceptionally well" in the State.

Criticizes Manifesto

Stevenson Defends High Court Ruling

CHICAGO — (UP) — Adlai E. Stevenson disagreed with the recent segregation manifesto of Southern congressmen Tuesday, declaring he does not believe the U. S. Supreme Court exceeded its "proper authority" in the controversial school case.

Stevenson issued a statement which said the nation "must proceed along the course" charted by the high court.

"I do not agree that the Supreme Court exceeded its proper authority in its rulings on school segregation," the Democratic presidential hopeful said.

"I think rather that these rulings are correct interpretations of the Constitution and the conscience of the nation," he said.

One hundred and one Southern senators and representatives have signed a proclamation condemning the "unwarranted exercise of power" by the Supreme Court in the case.

Stevenson said the fact that the list of signers included "distinguished, responsible leaders of a great region of our country is a reflection of the gravity of the racial tensions that have arisen in the South."

He also said "it is very important to recognize that these Southern leaders urge that violence and extreme measures be avoided."

Stevenson said it is his own belief that differences in the South can be resolved through legal processes.

"It is noteworthy in this connection that today no single school district in the South stands in defiance of the order of the land, and therefore could not oppose it.

of any federal court," Stevenson said.

"We must proceed along the course that has been so clearly marked out.

"The immediate task is to reduce the tensions that have already produced such shameful consequences. Stevenson said. "That burden rests on all of us, North and South, white and Negro, Republican and Democrat."

Sen. Paul Douglas, Illinois Democrat, said Tuesday the "manifesto" will stimulate resistance to the Supreme Court school segregation decision.

"I fear its effect will be to discourage those who were willing to cooperate in making the adjustments to the law in reason and friendliness," Douglas told the Senate.

He acknowledged the Southerners' right to issue their statement but said, "I deeply regret the action."

Two Southern congressmen, Reps. Harold D. Cooley, and Thurmond Chatham, both North Carolina Democrats, sharply questioned the wisdom of the declaration.

Cooley termed the manifesto "a dangerous document," and Chatham said he considers the Supreme Court decision the law

Anti-court 'manifesto' criticized

Afro-American, Baltimore, Md. Oct. 3-27-56

WASHINGTON

"When you tear down respect for law and order, the hoodlums are going to be violent.

"Everybody knows that. And they know it, and they are doing it deliberately to make it possible for the hoodlums to do it."

These words were used by Thurgood Marshall to describe the motive of the 96 Southern Congressmen who over the weekend denounced the United States Supreme Court's school decision.

THE DIXIE BLOC, composed of 19 Senators and 77 members of the House, issued a so-called "manifesto" describing the court's ruling as a "clear case of judicial power."

They argue in the statement that the decision has fanned the flames of hatred and suspicion in the South.

They term the statement a "declaration of constitutional principles" and pledged themselves "to use all lawful means" to reverse the decision.

MR. MARSHALL'S criticism of the action of the Congressmen was made during an address, Friday at Vermont Avenue Baptist Church.

The occasion was the official kick-off of the NAACP's annual membership drive which has a goal of 15,000 members and $15,000.

The lawmakers' document, the NAACP chief counsel declared, contains a "lot of filthy language."

"THEY CONDEMN the Supreme Court. They condemn our government. They say the Supreme Court isn't entitled to respect and support, and they say they are against violence.

"How can Congressmen counsel and breed disrespect for law and order and then contend they are against violence?" he asked.

"When you tear down respect for law and order, the hoodlums are going to be violent," Mr. Marshall declared.

HE ADDED: "They can't fool anybody by saying, 'we will take all lawful means to reverse the decision.'

"There are no lawful means to upset the Constitution of the United States except to amend it," he concluded.

'All-American' town stages cross burning

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. 38a Oct. 2-18-56

By LARRY STILL

WASHINGTON

"I am going to get me a gun. I'll be ready if they come back."

Frank Dove was looking at charred remains of a six-foot cross he found in his front yard—not in Mississippi or Alabama, but near Rockville, Md., just 20 miles from the nation's capital.

"I was sitting there looking at television and I heard the kids scream. We ran outside and saw this wooden cross sticking in a pan of sand and gravel. It was burning so I kicked it over on the ground and put it out.

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Oct. 2-18-56

"I SAW somebody looking like a boy running down the road. The kids said he had knocked on the window before they saw the fire. He got into a car with some other men and drove away. It was a light Ford, about 1950. I didn't get the license.

"The Rockville fire department and police came but the fire was out. The police said it was just a prank, but somebody muttered something about the Ku Klux Klan."

Mr. Dove, a pleasant-face construction worker, calmly related the details of this flaming incident which had been kept hush-hush for over a month in this suburban community of colored Maryland settlers.

THE CROSS burning occurred at the beginning of the year in front of Mr. Doves' modest four-room brick cottage on Seven Locks Rd. in a fruit growing section of prosperous Montgomery County called Scotland.

Details of the act leaked out through one of the many relatives of the Dove family in Washington. The family has lived in the area for generations. Frank rents his home from his brother, Leroy, a cement finisher in D.C.

Mr. Dove, who lives with his wife and two stepchildren in the suburban cottage, said he had not even talked to his brother about the disturbance.

"I wasn't worried. I'm going to get me a gun and be ready when they come back," he declared.

THE INCIDENT has been reported to Montgomery County NAACP executive secretary Alphonso Lee who asked the Rockville officials to determine if the act is a part of a campaign to drive colored residents out of the area.

"There is an awful lot of building going on in this town and certain real estate dealers have said they don't want too many colored citizens in the area," Mr. Lee declared.

Mr. Dove and several neighbors in the area said they have been approached by salesmen constantly within the past year trying to get them to sell their property. One member of the family has already sold a section of the estate.

"THEY'VE BEEN worrying me to death so much I don't even answer the door, now" says Mrs. Matilda Ruffin, whose house sits back up on a picturesque hill next door to the scene of the cross burning.

In the meantime, back in Rockville, fire department and police officials don't think there is anything to the incident.

"We just found some sand and gasoline in a can," said T. M. Slater, assistant fire marshal.

"I didn't know anything about the Cross," said Capt. Richard Linthicum of the county detective bureau. We don't have any racial trouble like that out here. It was probably some kid," the officer said.

ROCKVILLE was recently cited by Look magazine as one of the nation's All-American towns and has signs to this effect posted throughout the city. Less than three blocks from one of the signs in front of the court house is another sign reading "White Trade Only."

The community's NAACP and Civic Unity Committee has been waging a campaign for more integration of public facilities and has reported progress in several areas. The county recently began integration of its school system.

EXAMPLE OF ALL-AMERICAN city traditions can be seen by citizens of Rockville area daily in Middle Lane section near heart of city. Although community is made up of predominantly colored citizens, their trade is not welcome in booming area. 8 Public Swimming Pools In Baltimore End Segregation

Weekly New Orleans, La.
P.3

Baltimore (ANP)- An integrated recreational program, in operation here less than two weeks, is working out to the satisfaction of public and civic leaders in Baltimore.

For the first time in history, Negroes and whites are swimming together in Baltimore's 8 public pools.

Although there have been several minor incidents, the program is considered a success.

"we've had some name-calling and that sort of thing in a few of the pools, but nothing serious and there has been no violence of any kind, " said L. Edgar Myerly, assistant superintendent of parks.

Dr. Furman L. Templeton, executive director of the city's Urban League, said the entire project, admittedly complicated in a city which geographically and historically has existed on a segregated basis, has been approached in a "healthy air.'

"Ihave personally inspected the pools," Templeton stated, "and have ben in the pools with my two sons and I am pleased to report that there has been no difficulty with the exception of two minor incidents.

"Ihave observed a wonderful morale and espirit de corps among park personnel and the only disturbing thing I have noticed is a pronounced drop off in white attendance, but we're hopeful that will build itself up quickly."

Baltimore has dropped the color bar not only in pools, but has also integrated the life guard and attendant personnel.

Negroes Welcomed To Baltimore Swimming Pools

Kansas City, Mo.
Fri. 7-6-56

BALTIMORE, Md. — (ANP) — "No incidents were reported," according to Charles A. Hook, city superintendent of parks, when Baltimore opened its swimming pools last week to persons of all races on an integrated basis.

The opening had been delayed a week for special training of pool personnel, Hook said, adding: "I feel that the two-day course had a great effect on how our personnel operated."

Hook related that Negroes came to the pool expecting to be stopped or asked questions, "but found that they were treated with courtesy," and as the day progressed gained confidence and enything."

Negroes Begin Using Beaches

Star P. 26-A
Thurs. 5-31-56

BALTIMORE, May 31 (AP).—Maryland's two main publicly owned beaches opened yesterday for the first time on an unsegregated basis. No incidents were reported.

Negroes availed themselves of the opportunity to use unsegregated bathing facilities in only one of the two areas, however. At Sandy Point State Park on the Chesapeake Bay about 15 miles south of here, what was described as a "handful" of Negroes used a beach which had formerly been for whites only.

The area is divided by a natural land jetty, and in the past one beach was all-white and one all-Negro. The small group of Negroes was part of a crowd of about 500 whites.

At Fort Smallwood Beach, just south of the city and operated by it, no Negroes used the bathing facilities newly opened to them, but in the general park area, as has been the practice in the past, Negroes used the playgrounds and picnic tables along with whites.

Desegregation of the beaches stemmed from a Supreme Court opinion in November, 1955, barring segregation in public parks

Integrated Pools Opened In Baltimore

Post + Times Herald P. 7
Tue. 6-26-56

BALTIMORE, June 25 (AP) Two white youths were given suspended fines today after being charged with disorderly conduct at one of Baltimore's newly integrated swimming pools.

It was the only incident reported as the five pools opened on an integrated basis for the first time Saturday.

Magistrate Henry L. Rogers suspended $25 fines imposed on Edward Peddicord, 17, and Charles M. Appleby, 16, and put the youths on probation. Both were said to have gotten in the way of swimmers going to and from a locker room.

Peddicord told the magistrate he stood at the edge of the pool counting the number of Negro swimmers entering and said he planned to stay out if too many went in. Rogers reminded the youths the Supreme Court had banned segregation at the municipally-owned recreation facilities.

Meanwhile, in Annapolis, Joseph F. Kaylor, Director of Forests and Parks, said there had been no problems with integration at Sandy Point State Park, which is the only bayside resort operated by the State. He said full use is being made of both swimming beaches which before this year were segregated.

Pools integrated

BALTIMORE—All city swimming pools opened here Saturday on an integrated basis for the first time. Attendance at the pools was average and some colored persons were on hand at most of the pools.

No incidents were reported and no difficulties experienced by recreation department workers or police. Recreation department and police authorities had planned the opening for six months, with orientation courses for workers and officers assigned to the pools.

Colored guards were employed at most of the pools.

The arrest last week of James D. Urey, secretary to President Tubman of Liberia and Anthony B. Gray, a Liberian student at Temple University, was probably only a minor incident to Baltimore police.

They were detained at police headquarters pending the arrival of U.S. immigration officials.

Their arrest followed their entrance into a downtown restaurant at 10:30 a.m. for breakfast.

Said the waitress: "We don't serve colored persons here." And the proprietor backed up his employee.

Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah (pronounced En-kroomah) of Gold Coast, West Africa, visited Baltimore, while a student at Lincoln University 20 years ago.

At a bus station, he asked where he could get a drink of water. The white attendant, a sneer on his face, pointed to a spittoon.

He's never forgotten, nor forgiven Baltimore's rudeness.

Nor will the Liberians who are guests in our country ever forget our violation of the elemental question that tests decency and Christianity: "When I was hungry, did you feed me?"

No meals for visitors at City Hall

"In our restaurants in other parts of the country we serve colored people but here in Baltimore the public sentiment is against it.

"If there was a law on the books which said restaurants should serve all, we'd go along with it. We'd be happy to stop all this trouble . . ."

These were highlights of the comments made by John J. Russell, vice president and general manager of the Bickford Restaurants on Thursday.

Mr. Russell was asked to comment on the refusal of the Bickford Restaurant at 3 N. Holliday St., to serve a mixed group of Nashville, Tenn., city councilmen on Tuesday.

In the group which was refused service was Z. Alexander Looby, Nashville city councilman and well-known Republican leader, and a member of the NAACP's national legal committee.

He reported that an employe of the restaurant told him, "We will serve you, but you will have to eat in the kitchen."

The restaurant in question is across the street from the City Hall where the visitors were guests of Baltimore's Mayor D'Alesandro.

WITH MR. LOOBY at the time of the refusal, were Councilman Robert E. Lilliard and Patrolman Clay Dowdy of Nashville, and two white Nashville councilmen, Wesley Dixon and Walter Morgan. All left the restaurant without being served.

After the restaurant incident, Mr. Looby did not rejoin the 40-man caravan for a tour of the city's redevelopment and low-cost housing projects, but went on to Washington, where he rejoined the group.

Nashville's Mayor Benjamin West, another member of the party, told the AFRO in Washington that the refusal 'upset Mr. Looby and upset me too.'

NEWS OF THE treatment of the Nashville visitors was front page news in the Nashville Tennessean on Wednesday.

Mayor West and members of his municipal staff were on a three-city tour to observe the functioning of municipal governments.

"We were treated with much courtesy in both Philadelphia and Washington," Mr. Looby commented later.

He said that his efforts to apprise Baltimore's Mayor D'Alesandro of the treatment proved futile.

Mr. Looby did not attend the Mayor's luncheon for the visitors in a downtown hotel later on Tuesday, although the two other colored members of the delegation did.

On Wednesday, the group toured Washington and on Wednesday evening returned to Nashville.

HERE IS THE full conversation with Mr. Russell, general manager of the Bickford Restaurants:

Afro-American

Q—We understand that a group of city councilmen and other officials who were here as guests of the city of Baltimore, on Tuesday, entered your Holliday St. restaurant and that the colored members were stopped by an employee and told they would have to eat in the kitchen. Has this matter come to your attention, sir?

A—I didn't hear anything about it, but I believe it could happen. It does happen. You see we're victims of the community standing and that kind of thing.

We don't take sides because we employ a great number of colored people, and we get along with them all right ourselves as business.

But you see, your condition here in Baltimore just simply—we can't go against the public sentiment. We're victims of circumstances in a case like that. It has come up once in a while.

Q—Have you ever allowed mixed groups to eat in your restaurants?

A—No. It never has happened in Baltimore. In our other restaurants in other parts of the country it is all right, but here in Baltimore it's the public sentiment that's against it.

We have done it, when people would be passing through, say for instance with a family and they'd have a colored maid, and they'd all sit down.

But I'd get a half dozen letters criticizing us whenever it happened. We still do it. But it isn't us against it, it's the community people.

Q—In view of the fact that the community is changing — we have mixed housing projects and integrated schools — and in view of the fact that we have city councilmen of both races who would be looking for a restaurant nearby City Hall, has it occurred to Bickford's that it might take the leadership in breaking this down?

A—The people who should take the leadership are the city councilmen and all of those people, they're the ones to do it. A business can't do it. We're helpless.

You have colored city councilmen and one in the House of Delegates (there are 3), they are the ones who should pursue that and change the ways here and then we'd be all right.

Q—In this instance, the people who were refused service were guests of our city.

A—Yes, well we wouldn't know the difference. As a matter of fact, we wouldn't be able to discriminate, because we wouldn't know.

Q—But you would accept and serve a colored maid with a white family?

A—We have done so, yes.

Q—Has she had to eat in the kitchen?

A—No. We just close our eyes, but then we get a volume of criticism. So we're victims of circumstances. It's not anything that's a policy of ours, you see.

Q—When you say the City Councilmen should be the ones to take the leadership and make the change, since they are not businessmen and don't own restaurants like Bickford's, how can they take the leadership?

A—Make them change the rules and regulations in Baltimore.

Q—Haven't they taken that step in passing the FEPC law?

A—They haven't done anything in Baltimore.

Q—The FEPC is the law in Baltimore now.

A—I know that, but why don't they change the whole thing, and then we'd be all right. We'd go along with anything if it is universal.

Q—In other words, if there were a law on the books which said that all restaurants and hotels should. . .

A—We have FEPC. We have

MAYOR WEST
'It upset Mr. Looby and upset me too . . .'

colored people working in our stores.

Q—If there were a law on the books which said that hotels and restaurants like Bickford's should serve all who come, you would be willing to do so?

A—We'd go along with it. Sure. What else could we do? We'd be happy to stop all this trouble.

Q—How many restaurants do you operate in the city?

A—Only six, here.

Q—How long have you been in business here?

A—35 years.

Q—Are you a native Baltimorean?

A—No, I'm not. I'm from Boston where we serve everybody . . . Boston and San Francisco, but I've been here over 30 years.

Q—You don't think that you would like to take the leadership in ending this. . .

A—I wouldn't dare do it, because of public sentiment. There's nothing personal about it.

Q—Have you ever considered if you went ahead and opened your doors and said 'anybody who should like to eat may come in,' that maybe you would get one of two letters, as you say you're doing now, but in the long run people would soon accept it, just as they have accepted the integrated schools?

A—Well, I tell you that's putting it pretty stiff, that would be putting a responsibility on us that I don't think we ought to take.

Q—In view of the fact that it hasn't been tried, wouldn't you be willing to give it a chance?

A—Oh, I'd rather not do that because after I once upset my business, what would I do? That's a risky thing, you're asking me.

Q—Well, it is unfortunate. The people had been traveling all night when they came to your restaurant. They were to be guests at City Hall.

A—Our restaurant you mention is right near City Hall. But it would have happened in any of our restaurants, you know. We can't help it.

Q—It is certainly unfortunate, don't you think?

A—Yes. I don't like the idea, and I don't want any confusion or conflict with anybody, but as I say, we're the victims of a condition. So is every other restaurant in Baltimore so far as that's concerned.

Will sue for $100,000 singer says

Afro-American Sat. 4-28-56 Baltimore, Md.

BALTIMORE — "We are late this evening because the hotel where we were to stay decided not to accept us. That is a decision they will live to regret."

A standing-room-only crowd at Polytechnic Institute Auditorium to see Harry Belafonte and an interracial troupe in a musical revue Friday night listened momentarily in stunned indignation and then burst into wild applause when producer Jay Richard Kennedy gave this explanation 45 minutes after the performance was to begin.

"I do not feel guilty because the problem was not of our making," said the outspoken Mr. Kennedy, who arrived in Baltimore several hours after learning the troupe had been snobbed by the Stafford Hotel, when it was discovered there were colored members of the cast.

Ironically, the revue, "Sing, Man, Sing!" is a message show which musically traces the whole history of man to the present day, ending on a powerful note of freedom and brotherhood.

MR. BELAFONTE said reservations for the entire cast were made verbally by Emmett Callahan, company manager, and Kelvin O'Morrison, assistant stage manager, both white.

Reservations for the troupe were cancelled when the assistant hotel manager, a Mr. Piercy, learned the group was interracial, the popular actor and folk singer said.

"I walked up to the desk and asked for my keys and I was told (by Mr. Piercy) 'Mr. Belafonte is not in his room yet'." the singer said. "I told him I know I'm not in my room yet. I want my keys."

At this point, the balladier related, Mr. Piercy summoned Mr. Callahan and Mr. O'Morrison on the telephone and said, "We've run into a little situation."

"He wouldn't talk in front of me," he continued. "He called the two of them aside."

AFTER THE assistant manager explained to the white men he could not honor the reservations of the colored members of the cast, Mr. Belafonte said, the entire troupe stalked out of the hotel.

Mr. Belafonte told the AFRO that shortly after he suffered the discriminatory slap in the face he contacted his New York attorney, Sidney Kramer, relative to filing a damage suit.

"I'm filing suit against the hotel for possibly $100,000" he disclosed.

Mr. Kennedy, who wrote the screenplay for the movie, "I'll Cry Tomorrow," stated that he had cancelled the company's Southtrn tour because of the climate of racial tension below the "cotton curtain."

"If white people love this man's artistry, they have to show they respect Belafonte and my company before I'll perform," the producer said in reference to the cancellations.

Baltimore, Md.

ON THE STAFFORD Hotel incident, Mr. Kennedy said:

"They've made themselves a national mistake. They made this mistake with two people (he and Mr. Belafonte) who do not intend to let go."

Mr. Kennedy said three suites had been rented at the hotel, adding, "When the white people arrived they were admitted, but when the colored people arrived suddenly they had no room."

"I do not intend for this to happen again to this company," he declared.

The troupe, which has a four-month road tour before opening on Broadway in the fall, is composed of 23 colored members and 20 whites.

MR. O'MORRISON said "They're the most amiable group i've ever worked with or been around. The strangeness of it is they never thought of color difference.

"The whole company was humiliated," Mr. Belafonte explained. "We wanted a place for the kids to freshen up and a large room to rehearse some new numbers."

The company was given accomodations at the Madison Ave. branch YWCA to hold a rehearsal. They were directed by a colored hotel employee.

Mr. Belafonte, attired in a cap, trench coat, sports jacket and Levis, stayed at the Druid Hill YWCA until show time, following his appearance at the YWCA.

AN APPRECIATIVE audience gave a rousing ovation when, at the end of the show, Beafonte paid tribute to the NAACP and other militant groups fighting the sort of thing he encountered here in Baltimore.

A Stafford Hotel official contacted by the AFRO for a statement on the Belafonte incident apparently had never heard of the popular entertainer who has performed on stage, screen and radio.

The official asked, "Who is this person?"

Mr. Belafonte's retort to this was:

"There are a lot of white people who wouldn't recognize my name. There are a lot of white people who wouldn't recognize Jackie Robinson or Ralph Bunche, Lena Horne or Dorothy Dandridge."

HARRY BELAFONTE
He'll sue for $100,000

HARRY BELAFONTE arriving 45 minutes late for a scheduled appearance in Baltimore explained to a restless audience that the delay had been caused by the refusal of a local hotel to accept him and his interracial party. The noted folk singer has not announced what action he plans as a result of the incident.

4 D.C. teachers refused service at Baltimore hotel

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 5-12-56

BALTIMORE

Four Washington teachers, attending the Saturday conference of the Classical Association of the Middle Atlantic States at the Lord Baltimore Hotel, were refused service in the hotel's coffee shop.

The teachers were Mesdames Beatrice M. Harvey, Anita F. LeMon, Laverne West and Miss Lena Toms. All except Miss Toms are teachers at Dunbar High School.

According to Mrs. West, the wife of Dr. Charles D. West, prominent physician of Alexandria:

"The association held two sessions Saturday, one at 10:30 in the morning, the other at 2:30 in the afternoon.

"There were four colored teachers in attendance. After th morning session, we went downstairs to the cafeteria and took a table.

"The cafeteria manager told us that the shop served only white people. He said 'I'm sorry but that happens to be the policy of the hotel."

She said that the manager and the two assistant managers were "out" when she sought them to register a protest.

"I just wanted to sit there in the lobby but the other three teachers decided that we should make our protest by leaving."

THE FOUR TEACHERS, the Classical Association and the Americans for Democratic Action are all protesting the incident.

In a letter to the Hotel Managers Association, the teachers said that "such a narrow, bigoted racial policy is a reflection on all that the American flag symbolizes."

The teachers asked the officials of the Classical Association to sponsor a provision which would prohibit the group from meeting in segregated hotels.

Mrs. West said that the association president, Dr. John Latimer of George Washington University, is also drafting a letter of protest to the Hotel Managers Association.

In the initial draft of its letter, not yet completed for release to the public, the Americans for Democratic Action said:

"WITHIN the compass of one week, the popular singer and actor, Harry Belafonte, was refused a room at one hotel and colored members of the Classical Association of the Middle Atlantic States, meeting at another hotel, were refused luncheon.

"While the community generally is moving toward greater equality, under the stimulus of the Supreme Court decision and the fine leadership of the school authorities, the hotels do not budge.

"The annual report of the Maryland Committee on interracial progress and relations puts the blame for the situation where it belongs — 'The hard core of resistance to breaking down discrimination in the hotels is the Hotel Association.'

"Governor McKeldin," the ADA letter continued, "has called the hotel situation one of the most important facing civic groups and has offered support in a campaign to end discrimination."

"The executive board of our group voted to take the action on Nov. 21 which will carry the convention to Buffalo instead of Baltimore after being informed of the segregation which still exists in local hotels."

Gordon Manser, executive secretary of the Baltimore Council of Social Agencies, told the AFRO last Thursday why the Mid-East Conference of United Community Funds and Councils, scheduled to meet in Baltimore next February, changed its meeting site to Buffalo, N.Y.

While Mr. Manser was explaining his decision, the Maryland Industrial Union Council (CIO) was meeting in Washington for the third consecutive year because of the discriminatory policies of Baltimore hotels.

IN A LETTER written Wednesday, Patrick E. Zembower, chairman of the civil rights committee of the organization, said:

"We are resolutely determined to continue to do so until we can get facilites here at home for all of our delegates under one roof.

"This week, the delegates to the MIUC Convention in Washington will spend approximately $15,000 on rooms, meals, entertainment, souvenirs, gifts for the family."

Sat. 12-8-56

THIS WAS THE third major convention that refused to come to the city because of jim crow hotels in less than a month.

Before the community organizations group took its stand, the National Council of Geography Teachers by-passed Baltimore and moved its convention to Atlantic City over the weekend.

And 26 organizations are on record as being opposed to holding national conventions in Baltimore or any other city where discriminatory policies in the hotel prevail.

The League of Women Voters, the American Health Association Inc., the League for Industrial Democracy Inc., the Child Welfare League of America Inc., and Camp Fire Girls Inc are among the large national groups which will not hold conventions in cities where equal accommodations are not given to all members regardless of race.

Others with this policy are: the Board of Home Missions of the Congregational and Christian Churches, Amvets, American Association of University Women, American Mathematical Society and the National Council of Teachers of English.

Also the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO), American Veterans Committee and the American Association of University Professors.

ON TUESDAY Councilman Sol Liss (D-4th) successfully introduced a motion which will refer the whole question of jim crow in Baltimore hotels back to the Baltimore Hotel Association which is to confer with the Mayor's Committee on Human Relations and the Maryland Commission on Interracial Problems.

A report is to be made by the organizations to the Council within 60 days.

Mr. Liss told the AFRO that an ordinance making hotel discrimination illegal in this city would be introduced in the City Council unless the hotel owners voluntarily decided to drop all racial bans.

the Baltimore Commission on Human Relations and the Governor's Commission on Interracial Problems and Relations, with a suggestion the two groups meet to seek a solution.

If no action is taken in 60 days, Councilman Solomon Liss said, he would introduce an ordinance to outlaw such discrimination. If he does, it would mark the first time a city lawmaker has taken a direct stand in opposing existing segregation policies of local hotels.

Harold I. Fink, president of the Hotel Association, said he was willing to cooperate with the legislative bodies, but said he did not think Baltimore was "ripe" for a policy which would erase racial bars in hotels.

Fink said, however, that he believed it would be only "a matter of time" before the segregation question was resolved.

Racial Ban In Baltimore Hotels Is Hit

BALTIMORE, Nov. 27 (AP)—A special City Council committee has threatened to introduce legislation to prohibit Baltimore hotels from practicing racial discrimination.

Press Eyes 'Manifesto'

Afro-American Baltimore 3-24-56

BALTIMORE,

The so-called "manifesto" or "declaration of principles" issued by 100 southern congressmen recently was interpreted in various ways by the nation's newspapers.

Here are some of the editorial comments:

THE NEW YORK POST: — The declaration of war against the desegregation decision signed by 18 senators and 81 representatives is a challenge that the Democratic Party dare not evade.

All but two of the signatories were southern democrats; among those on the list were the party's 1952 candidate for Vice President —John Sparkman—and a number of others, like Senator Fulbright (D-Ark.) who have been mentioned for the second spot on the ticket this year.

For a long time liberal Democrats have been implored and cajoled to softpedal the civil rights issue in the interest of "party harmony."

Plainly, no such restraint inhibits most of the southern congressional delegation. Its manifesto is a blunt announcement that appeasement of the southern bloc has failed.

THE CHRISTIAN SCIENCE MONITOR: — Indeed, the manifesto reflects weakness as much as strength. For the forces there represented could hardly block a desegregation amendment — the method they say should have been used.

THE BALTIMORE EVENING SUN: — The difference between the southern and northern wings of the Democratic party on this issue has been there all along.

This particular document does not really widen the gap. It only underlines the gap's experience.

THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE: — Outside the Deep South and at points within it, the conviction of segregation's moral, social and legal wrong has been steadily growing.

This newspaper urges again, as it did editorially on Feb. 19: "We are all Americans, North and South, white and colored, and we must find, with reasonable dispatch, an American solution to our common problem."

THE RALEIGH NEWS AND OBSERVER: — But there should be an end to the pretense that the decision is illegal, and therefore not binding. And there should be no false hopes raised that the decision will be changed.

That will not happen and the people of the South must adjust themselves to it as best they can. That does not mean that the races will be mixed in all the schools overnight. It does mean that the law must be recognized and must not be flouted.

THE BIRMINGHAM NEWS:— We welcome the appeal of the southern congressmen to our people not to be provoked by agitators and troublemakers and to refrain from disorder and lawless acts.

We see no prospect of any early reversal of the decision, which was unanimous.

THE MONTGOMERY ADVERTISER: — Our congressmen, as the Advertiser has often remarked, have held aloof from the southern rebellion, being content to leave resistance to state officials.

The Dixiecrats were an impotent wheeze and never had a chance. A third party erupting from the present rebellion might not be.

THE NEW YORK HERALD TRIBUNE: — As the debate grows, it is interesting to see how the Supreme Court is proceeding. Last week the court affirmed that the ban on segregation in public schools applied equally to all tax-supported institutions of higher learning. This was entirely logical.

ST. LOUIS POST-DISPATCH: — For they (the southerners) neglected to mention in their manifesto one of the most important principles of any constitutional government.

This is the principle that the law as interpeted by duly constituted courts shall be obeyed until or unless the law as interpreted by these courts is changed. Without a general respect for this rule, you do not have constitutional government. You have anarchy or despotism.

THE WASHINGTON POST:— It is indubitably true, as Mr. Eisenhower pointed out, that the Supreme Court's reversal of long accepted constitutional doctrines poses for the South an extremely difficult problem of readjustment and that this readjustment "is going to take time."

It is of the utmost importance to recognize, we believe, that while the moral and constitutional issues involved in the extension of full civil rights and political equality to colored people, admit of no compromise, the tactics and timing of that extension need to be conditioned by wisdom and realism.

THE BOSTON POST: — (We) remember that 18 years ago, FDR tried to "pack" the Supreme Court. Senator George (D-Ga.) was a leader in the fight against the move.

"The executive, legislative and judicial powers were ordained separate and independent of each other," thundered George.

Today George leads the southern move to override the same court's antisegregation decision. Period.

THE ATLANTA CONSTITUTION:—The split in the Democratic Party over the anti-segregation issue can benefit nobody but the Republicans who, because of it, hope to regain both White House and control of Congress.

Any serious talk of a third party should be classed as political irresponsibility.

In 1931, after a Negro was lynched in Maryland's Eastern Shore town of Salisbury, the late Baltimore Sage H. L. Mencken, exploding in Baltimore's Evening Sun, hurled a carboy of acid across Chesapeake Bay at the lynchers and their ilk. Sample corrosives: "The Eastern Shore Kultur . . . an Alsatia of morons . . . ignorant and ignoble minds." Maryland's state senate recently held a roll call on a resolution expressing "the sorrow of the General Assembly of Maryland over the passing of Henry Louis Mencken." It passed, not unanimously as such resolutions usually do, but by a vote of 22 to 5. Among the five nay-sayers: four long-memoried Eastern Shoremen. Last week Maryland's house of delegates did better by H.L., shouted through the resolution with no nays recorded.

Bias In Public Places Being Corrected In Mass.

Daily World Atlanta, Ga. Sept. 1-13-56

BOSTON, Mass — Discrimination in places of public accomodation is being corrected and a degree of integration is now being shown in public housing, the Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination revealed today in its tenth annual report to Governor Herter.

The report was signed by Mildred H. Mahoney, chairman, George W. Cashman and William D. Washington, commissioners. It covers a one year period ending November 30, 1955. During thsi time the Commission initiated received and processed 284 matters involving unlawful discrimination in employment because of race, color, religious creed, national origin age or ancestory.

During this past year the Commission has not had to refer a single case for hearing. It has been able to accomplish everything it could accomplish in the informal conference period - complainants have received positions, have upgraded and have been returned to employment if unjustly discarged.

The Commission carried out surveys of State and Federal housing developments in Boston, Cambridge Holyoke, Worchester, Lynn, New Bedford and Springfield.

The commission carried out surveys of state and federal housing developments in Boston, Cambridge, Holyoke, Worcester, Lynn, New Bedford and Springfield. It was pointed out that no case involving public housing has as yet been presented to the commission.

AT THE SAME time it was revealed that during this year it has processed 27 matters pertaining to discrimination in public places of accommodation because of religion, color or race and had reviewed the advertising brochures of 335 Massachusetts resort hotels, all of which were found to be in compliance with the law.

The commission's field representatives carried out an extensive educational program in order to explain in more detail the operation of the public accommodation law.

Since this law is relatively new, the commission was pleased with the degree of understanding and cooperation which was revealed by these visits.

THE REPORT indicated increased activities in the enforcement of the age amendment. Field representatives of the commission called upon 35 companies in selected parts of Massachusetts to explain the age amendment in greater detail.

Of this number it was necessary for 12 companies to change their application for employment forms.

Earlier, notices had been sent to 786 employers and employment agencies, bringing to their attention specific violations in help wanted advertising and requesting a statement as to the reasons for specifying age directly or indirectly.

Some 735 of those cited pleaded ignorance of the law, 51 business organizations requested exemption based on the premise that age constituted a bonafide occupational qualification, five of which requests were approved.

THE HELP and interest of civic minded people who serve the commission without compensation on councils, which aid in the educational work of the MCAD, was acknowledged in the report.

These councils are located in Springfield, Boston, New Bedford, Worcester and Lynn. They have assisted the commission in conducting surveys, making inquiries as to the pattern of employment and cooperating in apprentice training opportunities.

The report states that the help of these councils introducing the commission to their communities and in enlisting the interest of cooperating groups has been incalculable.

Finally the report revealed that schools have been most helpful in the dissemination of the MCAD pamphlet, "Discrimination—Danger to Democracy," which was written for high school pupils and is widely used throughout the state.

Discrimination now on way out, Mass. commission declares

BOSTON — The Massachusetts Commission Against Discrimination revealed in its 10th annual report to Gov. Christian Herter that discrimination in places of public accommodation is being corrected and a degree of integration is now being shown in public housing.

The report was signed by Mildred H. Mahoney, chairman, George W. Cashman and William D. Washington, commissioners.

It covers a one-year period ending Nov. 30, 1955. During this time the commission initiated, received and processed 28 matters involving unlawful discrimination in employment because of race, color, religious creed, national origin, age or ancestry.

Teacher Out: He's Negro

38a

GLOUCESTER, Mass., Sept. 13 (UP).—An Oregon man who was hired by mail to teach school here was given $1,000 and sent home when he proved to be a Negro, it was disclosed today.

City Councilor Manuel F. Lewis called for a "complete public investigation" into the payment made a week ago for transportation of the teacher, Warren McClure, thirty-four, from his Eugene, Ore., home to Gloucester and back.

No school official would say that Mr. McClure's color influenced the decision to terminate his contract. However, Superintendent of Schools L. Munro Grandy acknowledged that he did not know Mr. McClure was a Negro until the teacher arrived here.

Mr. McClure was hired by the school department at $4,200 a year. Because of Massachusetts' anti-discrimination laws, the department could not request information as to his color on the application form. On Aug. 27, Mr. Grandy announced that Mr. McClure would teach the sixth grade at Babson School.

Mr. McClure arrived here last Thursday and, after talking with school officials, agreed to accept $1,000 for transportation and termination of his contract. He spent that night in the Gloucester Y. M. C. A. and left for home next day.

Michigan Governor Hits Racial Discrimination

Chicago Defender P. 6
Atlanta, Ga.

LOS ANGELES — (ANP) — Gov. G. Mennen Williams of Michigan said in a speech here last week that discrimination of any kind against any citizen is a time bomb placed in the hands of America's enemies.

Williams said discrimination is repugnant to democracy. It generates friction and resentments which gravely damage the unity of our people.

Wed. 1-11-56

"The denial of equal opportunity to racial, nationality and religious groups plays directly into the hands of those who would destroy us."

Williams spoke at an affair given under auspices of the Democratic National Committee in the Golden State Auditorium. He said:

"The recognition of human equality, since we are all children of God, has been one of the most important facets of our national policy as well as of our democratic integrity.

"There are neighborhoods in every community in this nation of ours — north, west, south, east — in which some of our citizens are not permitted to live for no other reason than their color, their nationality or their religion.

"There are schools their children are not permitted to attend despite the recent Supreme Court decision."

The Democratic governor, who has been mentioned as a possible presidential candidate, offered a four-point program to eliminate discrimination:

1. Abolish all distinctions between naturalized citizens and American born.

2. Repeal the McCarran-Walter Act and substitute for it the Lehman bill.

3. Revise and expand refugee legislation to give effective aid to the victims of Communist enslavement.

4. Eliminate all barriers to the fullest possible participation by all of our citizens in all things it is the nation's power to confer.

No color bar in Wyandotte—mayor

WYANDOTTE, Mich. — "I would certainly have no part in that kind of thing."

That was the reaction of Mayor William Kreger to a query last week concerning whether it was true that there was "a concerted effort" to keep colored persons from residing in Wyandotte.

According to an article in the Montgomery (daily) Advertiser, Wyandotte is a Detroit suburb in which colored persons are not allowed to live.

MAYOR KREGER said that he told a reporter for the Alabama paper "No" to a point-blank question of whether Wyandotte which is close to both River Rouge and Ecorse where colored persons to live. — makes a concerted effort to bar colored person.

"I am in business (wholesale) and I could not afford to do anything like that.

"I told the (Montgomery reporter) that I would not like to be quoted and would not have any part in that propaganda they are trying to spread.

The Alabama paper has been doing a series on Northern communities designed "to jam home —our (the Montgomery Advertiser's) sorrowful contention that wherever the colored person migrates in significant numbers, he encounters rejection."

Anti-White Charge Gets Nurse Fired

Advertiser
Tues. 9-25-56
Montgomery

LANSING, Mich., Sept. 24 (AP)— A white employe who complained that her superiors at a state mental institution discriminated in favor of Negroes has been fired as a "trouble-maker."

The complaint was the first of its kind in nearly a year's operation of the Michigan Fair Employment Practices Commission.

Charles F. Wagg, state mental health director, denied the woman's charges and disclosed over the weekend that she had been dismissed.

Wagg said Mrs. Cledah Sundwall, classified as a nurse attendant "B", was dropped because she failed to "fit in" after three months employment at the Farmington State Children's Home.

Mrs. Dundwall has 15 days to appeal her dismissal. If she does so, she will receive a Civil Service hearing.

Her complaint was addressed to the Fair Employment Practices Commission, which turned it over to the Civil Service Commission.

Floyd Hamacher, chief Civil Service investigator who checked it said Mrs. Sundwall's complaint was aimed at both white supervisory personnel and Negro "charge attendants."

The latter are employes of the same nurse attendant classification who temporarily are placed in charge of their fellow workers. Often, Negroes have been designated in this capacity, Hamacher said.

'Michigan Declaration' Strikes at Segregation

Star Sat. 6-2-56
Washington D.C.
P.3-A

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich., June 2 (AP).—A "Michigan declaration" urging quick progress "to the day when segregation in practice is as rare as human slavery" was scheduled to go before the Michigan Democratic Convention today with the blessing of State party leaders.

The declaration is destined, according to sponsors, for wide circulation over the country. It is also to go to the Democratic Party's National Platform Committee at the Chicago convention in August.

The document was circulated among delegates last night. It had indorsement of virtually the entire State leadership, including key aides to Gov. G. Mennen Williams.

Recall Loyalty Fight

Gov. Williams and the late Senator Blair Moody, Democrat of Michigan, led an unsuccessful fight in the 1952 Democratic National Convention to require anyone participating therein to agree to a "loyalty pledge" binding them to support the party's nominees. Southern delegates defeated it.

The so-called "Michigan declaration" describes what it terms "the revolution of integration" as the "evil pattern of segregation yielding to the hammer blows of justice."

Other civil rights resolutions scheduled for action today would:

Recommend that Congress refuse to seat candidates whose elections "are obtained by unconstitutional and illegal denials of the right to vote; withhold Federal school aid from districts practicing segregation; eliminate discrimination in interstate travel, and abolish unlimited debate in the Senate.

Other Resolutions

Resolutions awaiting action also called for a Federal anti-lynching law, abolition of the poll tax and creation of a civil rights division of the Department of Justice.

It has been certain for weeks that the party's State convention would be asked to adopt "a very strong" civil rights program as a move to calm unrest among Negro voters, especially in Detroit.

Negroes have made a discrimination issue of the 1st congressional district's refusal to give State Senator Cora Brown, a Negro, and her supporters, at least half of that district's delegates to the national convention. Miss Brown is an announced candidate against Representative Thaddeus M. Machrowicz, Democrat of Michigan, whose supporters nominated the delegates and alternates. These include Negro representation but not from the Brown camp.

The 1st district is about evenly divided between white Polish elements of Hamtramck and adjoining Negro populated areas.

Convention Keynoter

Representative Charles C. Diggs, Democrat of Michigan, was chosen as the convention's keynoter after the 1st district political ruckus erupted into an issue of alleged discrimination. Mr. Diggs was the first Negro ever chosen for the honor.

The 44-vote delegation to the national convention was expected to receive instructions to support Gov. Williams for the presidential nomination. He has announced for a fifth term as Governor and said he was a candidate for neither the presidential nor vice presidential nomination.

Integration In Detroit Rated 'Best'

Sun. Sun. 4-12-56
P.24

Negroes in City Are Prosperous

DETROIT. (UP).—This city probably deserves to be rated the nation's best in the field of Negro integration.

The Negro in Detroit has an air of prosperity. Wages are high here and the Negro gets a good share of well-paying jobs.

Homes in many Negro areas are expensive, neat and well-kept. Negro children, most of them well-dressed walk along the sidewalks with white children, en route to the same schools in mixed neighborhoods.

There are Negroes in important public offices. Circuit Judge Wade McCree is a Negro. So is Dr. Remus Robinson, a member of the Board of Education. There are nine Negro state legislators and a Negro Congressman—Rep. Charles S. Riggs jr.

Negroes work in the stores and banks. They drive many of the city's buses, sell stamps in the postoffice and deliver mail. They read meters in homes throughout the city, eat in the best restaurants and stay in the best hotels. There are public housing projects where Negroes and whites live together.

The United Auto Workers union has been a big factor. It has fought against discrimination in the big car factories and other industries. But it cannot dictate hiring, and some of the smaller manufacturing concerns resist hiring Negroes. The union's main success has been in preventing discrimination once the Negro is on the job, in promotions and other matters.

But Detroit is no perfect model of absorbing the Negro. The Negro here has problems, too.

Housing appears to be the most serious. Negro leaders complain that public projects don't operate o na "first come, first served basis." The battles to open the projects to Negroes had to be fought, one by one. The latest was won in March.

In private homes Negroes still are segregated, in fact, into sections of the city. Racial covenants are illegal but there are areas with "understandings" that white homeowners will not sell to Negroes.

Such segregation has brought "all-Negro" schools, not as a matter of policy but as a matter of fact. In fringe areas, Negro leaders say there is evidence of subterfuge to juggle the white-Negro balance to keep some schools mostly Negro or white.

They face a segregation problem in most private hospitals, being forced into non-white wards. The churches in the area have slowly increased desegregation. There are some mixed congregations in Detroit. A few have Negro clergymen.

There are Negroes on the police force, although none ranks as high as lieutenant.

One of the best known Negro spokesmen is Charles Wartman, who edits the largest Negro weekly in Michigan, "The Michigan Chronicle." Mr. Wartman feels the Negro has made substantial progress. He points to segregated housing and the run-down condition of Negro schools as among the big problems yet.

Arthur Johnson of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People points out that there is still a policy of assigning Negro school teachers in all or mainly Negro schools. He also doesn't feel that progress has been good in opening better jobs or "white collar" positions.

But there is substantial agreement that the Negro has made big and rapid gains in Detroit—particularly in the last thirteen years. Because of his relative prosperity, racial tensions are not high.

The last big flareup cme in June, 1943. Thirty were killed and 700 injured in race riots which lasted a week.

Since then, there has been no major trouble. Things have changed and are still changing.

Economic discrimination mars high Detroit income

Afro American Baltimore, Md.
Sat. 8-4-56

By RITA SHAW

DETROIT — Statistics show that colored persons earn higher incomes in the Detroit area than anywhere else in the country. But on the other hand, economic discrimination is still in evidence in the Motor City.

Proof of the above statements is contained in the annual reports of the University of Michigan's "Detroit Area Study" published recently. The study is based on 1955 incomes and the following table, based on these reports, has been converted from annual to weekly figures:

IT IS NOTED in the report that with the exception of 1954, which was marked by widespread unemployment, colored family income, like white family income, steadily increased during the five-year period.

Weekly income of colored families rose $12 during the five years, but at the same time, white family income increased by $25 weekly pointing to inequality of income opportunity or progress.

The "differential" between the two groups in 1951 was $25 a week. In 1952, the gap widened to $31; and in 1953, to $40;

In 1954, a year of recession, the incomes of both groups declined and the gap was reduced for the first time to $39; and again in 1955 to $38.

ACCORDING TO these figures, while colored income has been rising, the differential with white income is much larger now than it was five years ago.

Finally, the ratio between the two groups, giving colored family income as a proportion of white family income, shows more inequality.

The university study noted that for every $1 a white family got in 1951, a colored family received only 73 cents. In 1952 the colored figure fell to 70 cents.

And in 1953 it dropped to 66 cents; a penny less in 1954 and up to 68 cents in 1955. But even then, lower than in the first two years of the period surveyed.

IN CONCLUSION the study shows that the average white family in the Detroit area has an income one and one-half times larger than the average colored family and the differential is still rising.

This points out that discrimination against colored wage and salary earners is still very much alive here.

The differential is believed the results of the existence of biased employment policies that bar colored people from most of the better-paying jobs and occupations.

Which means also that those who want economic equality still have a big fight on their hands—not only in Mississippi but in Michigan too.

MEDIAN FAMILY INCOMES

1953	117	77	40	66
1954	110	71	39	65
1955	117	79	38	68

Violence In Detroit

Editor, The Advertiser:

In reference to your editorial of March 10, "Montgomery Calling Detroit," you fail to mention one act of violence so brutal as to make Hitler look like a Boy Scout.

I refer to the horrible murder of the young white doctor on the night of July 5, 1943, at 11 p.m. The doctor was pulled from his car onto a bridge and methodically and unmercifully beaten to death by a mad, howling, savage mob of Negroes. Their excuse for this useless murder — he was white. Therefore he was their enemy. The ironical twist of this story of horror is the doctor was on a mission of mercy, racing to a seriously ill child—a Negro.

Ask your friends the Detroit editors to look in their paper morgues and they will find this story on Pg. 1; ask them too, before they try to wash Alabama's dirty linens, to wash some of their own first.

Countermove To Southerners' Manifesto Seen

Humphrey Backs Senate Action to Uphold High Court

P.1 By JACK BELL
Associated Press Staff Writer

Senator Humphrey, Democrat of Minnesota, talked today of circulating a declaration supporting the Supreme Court's school integration decision to counter a Southern "manifesto" attacking the ruling.

Senator Humphrey said "it certainly seems to me that a statement of support for the decision of the court is valid and desirable." He told an interviewer he thinks some action of that kind may be taken.

The Minnesota Senator added he believes far more than the 19 Senators and 81 House members who signed the Southern document would be willing to sign a declaration that the court's order outlawing the segregation of white and Negro public school pupils is the law of the land and should be enforced.

However, Senator George, Democrat of Georgia, said in a separate interview that "if any vigorous effort is made to use force to carry into action the Supreme Court's decree, it is going to result in a desperate situation."

Fears End to Schools

"If this matter is pressed it will result in some States going out of the public school business. Unless there is a reasonable approach to this problem by men and women of good will that may be the result," Senator George added.

Senator Russell, Democrat of Georgia, who directed drafting of the manifesto, said he knows of no organized plan to use the Southerners' power in Congress in efforts to reverse the Supreme Court's ruling.

"However," he said "I think we will do anything legal that we can to mitigate this situation."

The manifesto was signed by four Republicans, Representatives Jonas of North Carolina, Cramer of Florida and Poff and Broyhill of Virginia. But not all southern Democrats were for it.

More Harm than Good

Representative Chatham, Democrat of North Carolina, said he thinks the resolution "may do more harm than good."

Representative Fascell, Democrat of Florida, said he wouldn't sign "a statement of open defiance of the Supreme Court of the United States which in itself accomplishes nothing and to which I cannot subscribe."

A side controversy developed last night when Representative Bass, Democrat of Tennessee, a signer of the manifesto, said it was his impression from cloakroom talk that the document was "designed to re-elect Senator George." Mr. Bass attributed a similar point of view to Senator Russell, but Senator Russell said later: "I never made any such statement."

A veteran of more than 33 years in the Senate, Senator George may run into stiff primary opposition this year. Former Gov. Herman Talmadge is expected to be his opponent. Mr. Talmadge is an outspoken advocate of racial segregation.

Editors Claim Negroes Seek Citizenship Without Strings

By KENNETH TOLER
Staff Writer

MOUND BAYOU, Miss., Oct. 9.—Segregation "in reverse" was observed Tuesday in this all-Negro town by a group of New England editors and publishers studying Mississippi's way of life.

Designed to give the newsmen an opportunity to see first hand the position of Mississippians on the controversial segregation issue, the week long tour is sponsored by the state and local communities.

Here in the heavily Negro populated area of Mississippi, the New Englanders were given some of the racial history of the state. Buried here is the only Negro delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1890.

During interviews Tuesday at Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes at Itta Bena, and here in this one-race town, the editors said they were told that Negroes look for the opportunity "and day" to attain full citizenship without any of the segregation "strings attached."

Wants Right To Vote

One of the Negroes in a large group of students interviewed by the New Englanders said he did not want to be a white man "All I want is to be treated as a man." He said one of those attainments is the ballot.

A Negro minister, visiting on the college campus, told one of the editors he feels that Negroes will not gain their full rights if left up to Mississippians.

"The minister told me that the job must be done from the outside," one of the editors said.

The New Englander also said the Negro minister told him he had suffered as a result of the voting in 1953.

"I was told by the Negro minister that after he had voted his house was burned, he was put in jail and his license to operate several small businesses was withdrawn," the visiting newsman said. "He said his white friends had urged him to try to vote again for his own good."

The New Englander said "it seems to me that fear is the basis of all legislation and efforts to prevent Negroes from gaining the rights to which they are entitled."

Dr. J. H. White, college president, told the New Englanders his major interest "is the 360,000 Negroes in the Delta." He is in his sixth year at the college built in a cotton field which opened with seven students. It now has more than 400.

Citizens along the route of the tour continued the round of hospitality to the New Englanders.

Stopping at Aberdeen after nighting at Columbus, the editors Tuesday morning had coffee and cake with citizens there, headed by Mayor George Howell. They lunched at Hugh White State Park near Grenada as guests of Grenada Countians.

Before going to Mound Bayou late Tuesday, the touring editors stopped at Delta State College at Cleveland where coffee and cake were served and welcoming messages given by President James Ewing and Mayor F. W Bishop.

The days finale was a dinner at the Mississippi Power Light Co. Lodge near Cleveland.

Wednesday they go to Vicksburg, stopping en route at Rolling Fork.

Yankee Editors' Opinions Split After Miss. 'Integration Tour'

Segregation Will End 'in Time,' Consensus Among Visiting Newsmen

Sun. 10-14-56

38a

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 13—A group of 20 New England editors and publishers have found that Mississippi has a major racial segregation problem at all levels, but disagree as to its solution.

A majority of the newsmen, who Sunday conclude a week of observation of the problem as guests of a state commission created for the purpose of preserving segregation through lawful and peaceful means, feel that integration will come to Mississippi "in time."

None feels that it can be settled "overnight," and a minority of the visitors believe Mississippi will be able to maintain its way of life indefinitely.

The New Englanders are divided on the question whether the Federal Government should step in with force and settle the issue. Some take the position that integration in the schools and acquirement of voting rights by Negroes will come only through federal intervention.

'Mississippi Problem'

Others, and they make up not quite half of the party, take the position that it is a Mississippi problem and should be settled by Mississippians. One admitted: "We have our problems and do not want them handled by outsiders."

All of the New Englanders admit there are few, if any, Negroes in their areas. However, those who insist that integration be invoked do not take into account the population ratio as between whites and Negroes in Mississippi. About 45 per cent of the state's two million inhabitants are Negroes.

In a statement which covers the position of a majority of the visiting New England weekly newspaper editors and publishers, Richard J. Robertson, publisher of the Darien (Conn.) Review and possibly the wealthiest editor in the group, said:

"Integration must eventually come despite Gov. J. P. Coleman's positive statement to the opposite. That does not mean it must be done immediately. We of the North, I do not believe, would insist on that."

Publisher's Viewpoint

Mr. Robertson feels that the resistance centers in the older citizens and not the younger generation.

"Certainly, the adamant attitude on the part of many of the older conservative minds of the South is not conducive to any solution or even beginning of a solution or attempt at a solution," he said.

Mr. Robertson, like many of the conservative Negroes in Mississippi, feels "there must be a meeting of minds and a meeting of races to discuss this problem and thereby bring about a solution which I feel many of the younger white people want, too, as well as the colored." A meeting of the New Englanders with Negro leaders in the all-Negro town of Mound Bayou took place.

MISSISSIPPI

In that interview, several of the Negro leaders pointed to an "unwritten and unseen" hand in pressuring Negroes and causing discriminations.

That statement was made in the face of one by the Rev. H. H. Hume, Negro editor and minister of Greenville, that much progress has been made by Negroes in his home town. The Rev. Mr. Hume is president of a national Baptist association with nearly 400,000 members.

The Rev. Mr. Hume's statement to the editors that Negroes are employed on the police force in his home town, that almost 1,500 vote and that schools have been "almost" equalized, was brushed aside for the more sensational charges of those interviewed.

Favors Outside Action

Another of the group who feels that outside action is necessary if Negroes are to gain "equal justice," was Paul C. Cummings Jr., editor and publisher of the Peterborough (NH) Transcript.

"I am sure integration will come either through evolution or revolution," he said. "I think it will be through evolution, although begrudgingly on the part of Southerners."

On the other hand, J. Clark Samuel, president of the Massachusetts Press Assn. and editor of the Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter, does not believe Mississippi's way of life will be changed.

"There never will be integration in Mississippi and its way of life will remain as it is," he said. "After my visit, I am convinced there have been distorted views expressed on the situation here by national publications."

Gordon Seavey, publisher of the Belmont, (Mass.) Citizen, takes the position that the New Englanders have problems of their own to worry about and to solve.

"We have our problems and do not want outsiders to come in and tell us how to handle them," he said. "On the other hand, I do not think it is up to us or other outsiders to come in and tell Mississippi how to handle its affairs."

Howard N. Fowler, editor of the Mansfield (Mass.) News, likewise looks on the problem as one for local settlement. He said that some of the charges being made as to conditions have been "trumped-up affairs."

Charges 'Brainwashing'

Some of the New Englanders said they could not understand why there is no segregation in the stores and other business establishments, yet it is maintained socially and in the schools. One of the visiting editors, John P. Kelly of the Bridgeport, (Conn.) Sunday Herald, after being in Mississippi less than 48 hours and after visiting only one Mississippi city, charged that "Mississippi Negroes have apparently been so brainwashed by generations of white supremacy that they don't care if they go to schools with white people or not—and preferably not."

"I will admit that I am an idealist who believes that all men are created equal in the eyes of God," he said. "To that extent I am biased myself."

He said "From what I have heard and seen in the short time I have been here, Mississippi and Georgia will remain the last bastions of segregation."

"Political demagoguery is in control," Mr. Kelly said. "The stronger a politician is against integration, the more certain he is of reelection."

Considerable concern was expressed by some of the visitors in Mississippi's absence of a compulsory school attendance law. Such an act, long on the statute books, was repealed at the 1956 session where other laws to tighten Mississippi's hold on segregation were enacted.

Those opinions were expressed by the New Englanders after Gov. Coleman told them frankly, "Segregation will be maintained in Mississippi for at least 50 years and possibly longer."

Select Own Itinerary

Fears of some of the editors that the tour had been "rigged" were dispelled when Hal DeCell public relations officer of the sponsoring Sovereignty Commission, asked the visitors to "pick" the places to visit and to "go on their own and interview the man in the street or in the field."

That procedure was followed and the New Englanders held private interviews and conferences with the Negroes.

New Aspect Of The Mississippi Negro Problem

Advocate Jackson Miss. Sat. 8-11-56

A rapidly developing condition is putting a new aspect on the Mississippi Negro problem which to some may appear as of far greater importance than the current argument and controversy over the issue of civil rights.

According to a well informed source there are some 350,000 Negroes in the 18 cotton producing counties comprising what is known as the Mississippi delta. The mechanization of cotton production has already reduced the demand for farm labor, generally supplied by Negro workers to the point where it is estimated that some 200,000 of delta Negro farmer workers are now only able to look forward to about four months work in the year hoeing cotton, with nothing but the income from the four months work to live on during the entire year.

According to a well informed source studies of mechanized methods and the use of chemicals will in about the next five years, according to advances already made, reduce drastically, if not altogether, the need for the hoe hand in the production of cotton.

What will become of this estimated 200,000 Negro workers no longer able to obtain the megre livelihood of four months work as hoe hands is already looming up as a major social as well as economic problem of vital concern to the future of the delta section and of the entire state.

Well informed business men as well as large cotton planters do not see, and are not urging Negro migration as a solution to this growing aspect of the Negro problem.

Some notable efforts are being made in an effort to attract industry to the delta section of the state, which at first view would seem to be attracted by the growing surplus of tractable labor. However this at present is not the view of the industrial employers looking for locations in the south, according to the best available information.

According to reports the large number of available Negro workers in the delta area has hindered rather than helped the location of new industries in the delta section of the state, as recent reports show, of some 40-odd new industries that have come to the state, only four have located in the delta section of the state.

The main reason that the large supply of Negro labor is failing to help in attracting new industries to the delta section, according to reports, is because of the present inability of the delta Negro Farm worker to qualify as an industrial worker, which is primarily due to his long induced habits as a cotton plantation worker.

To overcome this handicap of the Negro farm worker, and in order to hold him in the delta as a future industrial worker is one of the great challenges to Delta Leadership both white and Negro, for as we see it, there is nothing inherent in the Delta Negro Farm Worker that will prevent his becoming, with the proper opportunity for training, as good an industrial worker as can be found anywhere else in the nation

Woman Gets Land Back From Sheriff But Has To Pay

Commercial Appeal Memphis Tenn. Sat. 8-18-56

MENDENHALL, Miss. — (ANP) — A long, drawn-out court battle between a Jackson Negro woman and a former sheriff over a piece of land which she says he stole from her ended last week with the land going back to her.

The case was settled when Mrs. Irene Bethea paid $110 to Garrett P. Mullins of Mendenhall and he signed a quit claim deed over to her.

In her original complaint, which has been tried in Simpson county chancery court and later appealed to the state supreme court, she had claimed that she borrowed $100 from Mullins while he was sheriff of Simpson county and signed what she thought was a promisory note. Later, she said, she learned it was a deed to her land.

The case was due to come up again in chancery court here after the supreme court had reversed the original decision in favor of Mullins.

Last week's agreement ended with Mullins paying the court costs

'White foes of Miss. gov. intimidated'

Baltimore Md. Sat. 8-18-56

CHICAGO—Whites in Mississippi who oppose the political regime of Gov. James P. Coleman are subjected to threats and economic pressure comparable to that levied against colored citizens, Dr. Charles Hamilton, leader of a contesting delegation for that state's convention seats, said today.

Dr. Hamilton made his plea before the Credentials Committee and charged that the Coleman group stood ready to hold a second state convention and bolt the party over the civil rights question.

DR. HAMILTON admitted that his group had no colored members and said "it would not be healthy for a colored citizen to be a member."

The three-time loser in a convention-contested seat fight declared that members of his group are subjected to economic threats and have been fired from their jobs.

If successful, his group will replace the 22-man delegation headed by James Coleman, also a member of the Platform Committee.

Dr. Hamilton, who is also an Episcopal minister, refused to say what civil rights attitude his group would take if seated.

RETRACTION IS ASKED BY NEGRO PHYSICIAN

'Swamp Beating' Story Called Untrue By 'Victim'

PUBLISHED AT CHICAGO

By WILLIAM BOOZER
Staff Writer

INDIANOLA, Miss., Nov. 1.—A story in a Chicago Negro newspaper that an Indianola Negro physician was "lured into a swamp" and "manhandled by a mob of white men" has been labeled "completely untrue" in a letter by the physician demanding a retraction of the story.

Commercial Appeal

A group of white residents Thursday, expressing alarm over the newspaper account made public the letter of retraction "in the interest of continuing fine, harmonious race relations here."

Memphis, Tenn. Sat. 11-2-56

The physician, 29-year-old Clinton C. Battle, was arrested by city police Sept. 16 and charged with driving while intoxicated. Almost a month later, on Oct 13, the Chicago Defender carried a Page One story that Dr. Battle's auto had been forced from a road and that he had been attacked by several white men.

No Mention Of Charge

The story, under a headline reading "FBI Asked to Probe Attack In Mississippi," states that Dr. Battle "was lured into (a) swamp by a phone call that claimed a Negro woman was in need of medical assistance." The article made no mention of the DWI charge.

P. 51

The FBI had been "asked to determine if Dr. Battle's rights were not violated by jail officials" after he had been "thrown in county jail and held incommunicado for several hours," the article adds.

In Washington, the FBI informed The Commercial Appeal it has received no complaint regarding the case.

Dr. Battle has received national publicity for his endorsements of the Supreme Court desegregation decisions, for urging Negroes to vote, and for charges of economic pressure from white Citizens Councils. He has been active in the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

'Not Mistreated'

"I was not mistreated by the officers," Dr. Battle said Thursday. "I don't like that kind of journalism."

But he added: "Some city officials did tell me it was a miscarriage of justice." He would not name the "officials."

The young physician pleaded not guilty to the DWI charge before Mayor T. M. Pitts in City Court the day following his arrest, and was fined $102. By appealing the case to Circuit Court which meets in March, he has recovered his revoked driver's license.

A police report on the case states Dr. Battle was arrested at 1:30 a.m. after two motorists had complained he almost ran them off Highway 82, east of Indianola.

Waiting for his auto at the intersections of Highways 82 and 49-W were Police Sgt. Billy Fulton and Patrolman Ernest Sharp Jr. and Herman Steed. They followed the car to a point on Main Street within the city limits, where they made the arrest.

Comment Refused

Dr. Battle agrees with police statements that he was not unruly and was not mistreated. He insists, however, he was not inside the city when arrested, as police say.

The physician said he does not know where the Chicago newspaper, which sends 30 copies here weekly for street sales, obtained its story. No one from that publication contacted him, he said.

"A man did call me and say he was a reporter for the Chicago American and National Broadcasting Co., but I told him 'no comment.' And a man from a Chicago (Negro) magazine came here, and I told him the same thing."

He said the magazine writer told him, "Well, doctor, if you don't tell us what happened, the boys will fix it up like they want it to sound." He has seen no story on the case in that magazine, he said.

Mayor Pitts said the case as reported in the Chicago press "has set good feelings back considerably, in my opinion. Not too many white residents of Indianola, birthplace of the white Citizens Councils, are aware of the Chicago story, however.

John H. Hough, who owns 51 pieces of Negro property, including the Church Street office occupied by Dr. Battle, demanded the letter asking retraction of the article.

No Retraction Yet

"Our motive was simply to brand it for the lie that it is," said Mr. Hough, a planter and civic leader. "It's the most flagrant example of reckless, irresponsible, dangerous journalism I know of."

Dr. Battle wrote the Chicago newspaper that its story ". . . can only have the effect of creating ill-will between the races in the community in which I live.

"It is true that I was arrested, charged with a minor offense, but it is also true that I was accorded the same treatment given to any other citizen, under similar circumstances.

"In view of the foregoing, I hereby demand that you print a complete retraction in the next issue of your paper."

Two issues of the newspaper have been printed since the letter was written. There has been no retraction.

Story Is Denied By Negro Doctor

INDIANOLA, Nov. 2 (U.P.)—A pro-integration Negro physician said today he has demanded that a Chicago Negro newspaper retract a story that he was lured into a swamp and "manhandled by a mob of white men."

Post Herald

Dr. Clinton C. Battle, 29, called the story "completely untrue" and said he had no idea where the paper (The Chicago Defender) got its story.

Sat. 11-3-56

It appeared Oct. 13, nearly one months after Battle was arrested here on a drunken driving charge. He appealed his conviction.

Birmingham

The story said Battle was "lured" into the swamp by a phone call saying a Negro woman was in need of medical assistance and that his car was forced off the road and that Battle was attacked by several white men.

Headlined "FBI Asked to Probe Attack in Mississippi," the story said the FBI was asked to determine if Dr. Battle's "rights were not violated by jail officials" after he was "thrown in county jail and held incommunicado for several hours."

Battle said "I was not mistreated by the officers."

Battle said he had written the Chicago newspaper that the story "can only have the effect of creating ill-will between the races in the community in which I live" and demanded that the newspaper print a retraction.

The doctor said two Negro reporters from Chicago contacted him, but neither said he represented the paper that carried the story. Battle said he replied "no comment" to both reporters.

Battle said one reporter told him: "Well, doctor, if you don't tell us what happened, the boys will fix it up like they want it to sound."

Young Indianola Physician Says Story Is Completely Untrue

Indianola, Miss., Nov. 5 (DSN)—Dr. Clinton C. Battle, popular young Negro physician here last week demanded that the Chicago Defender, one of the nations top Negro newspapers which recently added a daily edition to its long published weekly newspaper, retract the story printed in its October 13th edition which said that Dr. Battle had been lured into a swamp and beaten by a mob of white men.

Dr. Battle in demanding that the paper retract the story labeled it as "completely untrue and said he had no idea whatever as to where the paper got the story.

The story was published some three weeks after Dr. Battle was arrested here and convicted on a drunken driving charge, with a new trial now pending after his appeal of the conviction.

The story said that Dr. Battle was lured into the swamps by a phone call saying that a woman in an isolated section was in need of medical assistance and that his car was forced off the road where he was seized and taken into the woods and "manhandled" by a mob of White men.

CITES 'HOLES' IN RULING

By RACHEL SHUTE

Special to The Commercial Appeal

COLUMBUS, Miss., Oct. 22.—Senator John Stennis (D., Miss.) Monday described the Supreme Court justices as a group of self-organized "social engineers" and emphasized that Mississippi schools will never be integrated.

"Our schools belong to our children and our plain path of duty is to keep them separate. Such a course benefits both groups," he said.

The senator spoke Monday night at a meeting of the Lowndes County Citizens Council in the City Auditorium. About 2,000 persons heard him discuss problems created by the decision of the Supreme Court.

"I believe we can win on the law and on the facts of the case," he said, "and I believe we can win the forum of national public opinion."

He pointed out that there is no Federal court decision requiring a state to operate a public school; nor a decision requiring a child to attend a state school.

A logical reason, other than color, could provide for permanent separation that would be valid. "The court has granted a generation of lawsuits," he declared, "but we have plenty of room left to fight within the confines of their decision."

He brought up the recent stories on Washington schools, and pointed out that such "trickling" would in time win our cause for us. "eW must appeal to reason and judgment of fair-minded people and convince the nation we are sincere and sound in our knowledge that integration will destroy our institutions."

The senator declared, in discussing the Suez Canal situation, "I believe a 12-month economic boycott of the Suez Canal will clear up the situation. Nasser needs us more than we need him."

He added, "eW have the money to ship materials around the southern tip of Africa and avoid the canal."

With Nasser over the barrel, economically, "there will be no need to send soldiers to fight it out. Egypt could not support a modern war for more than a few days," he said, pointing out that the per capita income in Egypt last year was $80.

Noted Miss. Editor Cites Increasing Racial Tension

Herald Tues. 12-27-55 P. 4

Birmingham, Ala.

Hodding Carter, editor of Greenville, Miss., Delta Democrat-Times, sees the racial situation in Mississippi as bad and ever worsening, but not as hopeless.

Carter, Pulitzer prize winner, former Nieman fellow, has an article in December 17 Saturday Evening Post, called "Racial Crisis in the Deep South."

He says that "Mississippi is a besieged state, but not one inclined to surrender. No one should expect that a decision of a Supreme Court can soon or conslusively change a whole people's thinking. That must be understood."

Carter explains that his story is not a traditional warning to let the South determine its own destiny, but rather to let the nation know of the hardening of the hearts of white and black men in the Southern areas of greatest Negro ensity —and especially in Mississippi—and to know why this tragic dterioration in human relations is taking place.

Carter carefully gives arguments for both sides, says probably a majority of whites in Mississippi feel it is a beleaguered state, a surrounded island, is a sea of compromise or surrender to integration. He says other state universities have opened or are about to open their doors to Negro students, and the Mississippians are apprehensive about the Hoxie, Arkansas, situation where a few Negro children were permitted to attend the white schools. He tells of the NAACP's being hated worse than the Communist Party.

"This wrath is understandable in human terms," Carter writes: "It has been the NAACP which has bested the traditional South in every legal battle from the Negro's right to Democratic Party membership to the school-integration decision. It is the NAACP which comes to the aid of the Southern Negro accused of violent crime; which has called incendiary mass meetings throughout the North; which has mocked Southern attitudes with impunity, refused any compromise and employed the tools of ridicule, reverse racism and unending belligerence which the Southerner would resent from any source and especially from members of the racial group which in Mississippi generally keeps its collective mouth shut.

"The hatred that is concentrated upon the NAACP surpasses in its intensity any emotional reaction I have witnessed in my Southern lifetime. And it may be added that the hatred for the white South among NAACP members may well match it.

"So what now? I am trying to write measuredly. During the past summer I was absent from Mississippi and the South for some three months. Possibly because of this absence, I was not prepared for the deterioration which I found when I came home at September's end. From every person of both races to whom I have talked since — and they number many scores—I have had almost identical comment: There's going to be worse trouble, or it's going to get worse before it gets better."

"Save for a detestable handful, these dismayed yet determined people are not professional rabble-rousers or demagogs or chronic pessimists. Among them are ministers and priests and businessmen, large-scale planters, small farmers and embittered poor white, Negro tenants, life-long southerners and newcomers. They have one common denominator, their common infection with a sense of tragedy.

"Yet those white Mississippians who fear, and other Americans, white and black, who believe there is any chance for significant or even token integration in the black-belt schools need neither fear nor hope. There is no chance within the ascertainable future."

Carter says integration will not become a reality in the black belts of Mississippi, Alabama, South Carolina, Louisiana and Georgia or in many areas in other Southern states until and unless the whites of these states change their minds — which he says isn't likely for a long time.

He says there is not much likelihood of widespread assertion by the Negroes in Mississippi of their right to vote. He also says equal justice for all in Mississippi is unlikely.

"There are other forces at work in Mississippi which can temper and may eventually end this conflict, Carter says.

"Normal human revulsion against unfairness may be one such force. In the wake of the mass meeting in Holmes County, at which the doctor and plantation manager were told to leave the state, there came reports that at least a minority of those citizens present at the meeting were ashamed. There is also the very human difficulty to remain incensed and combative when no real enemy presents itself.

"Two other forces may become effective in time. One is economic the other spiritual. Many successful, business-minded Missippians know that the present situation can be greatly harmful to our state's worth-while and intelligently conceived program to balance our agricultural economy with industry. Already Mississippi has attracted since World War II nearly 100 major industries, some of them with branch plants and others which have completely rooted themselves in Mississippi.

"They have come for a number of reasons: a plentiful and willing labor supply, availability of raw materials, new markets, a cooperative plant-building program and so on. In many instances they have come in search of peace, for behind them were the memories and the realities of labor turmoil. These newcomers do not want to exchange one sort of turmoil for another. I think that our more responsible leaders are becoming aware of this. And there is a second, and potentially the most important factor, the spiritual force about which one speaks gingerly and even self-consciously. The South has a reputation for being religious. In the black-belt counties some of the clergy, especially the younger clergy, may be skeptical as to the depth and breadth of the South's religious impulses, for many of them have either been silenced or simply exited because they have spoken for man's unity. But this spiritual reservoir, nevertheless, exists. The Christian world knows that it will endure, despite the silencing or banishment of clergymen."

EDITOR HODDING CARTER SAYS SOUTH IGNORES BROTHERHOOD

Birmingham Ala. Post 9-24-56

West Harwich, Mass., Sept. 24—"The South is a land of churchgoers who pay little attention to the Christian concepts of the brotherhood of man", according to a Mississippi newspaper editor speaking last week to the fifth annual conference of the New England Weekly Press association.

The speaker was Hodding Carter, editor of the Delta Democrat Times, Greenville, Miss. He said "Southerners are easy mannered and yet the most violently behaved people in the U. S. He said they are the most patriotic, yet the most defiant of national authority.

They have used dishonorable means to control their own destiny," he said, adding that Georgia, Mississippi, Alabama, Virginia, and Arkansas have "no intent to allow integration."

Carter who won a Pulitzer prize for articles on the integration problem, said "you have only to read your newspapers to realize the deterioration of racial relations that has taken place since the Supreme Court ruling two years ago."

He said the South should be proud of the way the governors of Texas, Tennessee and Kentucky called upon law-enforcement agencies to quell racial outbreaks in their states.

Carter, who said he was speaking as a newspaperman interested in the South's problems rather than a southerner, suggested "voluntary resettlement' 'of Negroes throughout the nation as a step toward solving the integration problem.

"Nine out of ten Negroes live in the south," he said. "If the Negro population were split up more evenly we could talk integration on more sober terms.

In Deep South, No Acceptance Of Integration, Says Hodding Carter

Call Kansas City Mo. 7.20

Fri, 10-12-56

MANHATTAN, Kas. — There has been a "tragic deterioration in race relationships in the South" since the Supreme Court decision on integration two and a half years ago.

That is what Hodding Carter Pulitzer-prize winning editor of the Greenville, Miss., Delta Democrat Times told a Kansas State College student assembly Wednesday morning.

"The deterioration is real, and appears in every aspect of intergroup life," he stated.

"In the Deep South there is no acceptance of public school integration."

Carter commented that Southerners have developed many ways to subvert, combat, and thwart any meaningful integration. He added that he felt no good could come from immediate integration of public school children in areas with heavy Negro populations.

Despite what he termed "a new rebellion in the South," Carter finds some hopeful signs "that present conditions will not continue forever." Integration has been carried out, for the most part peacefully, in the bordor states. But he emphasized that the key here was that there were few Negroes. Negroes have been integrated by many colleges in the South without incident, and by some parochial schools. Churches have supported the moral rightness of integration. Diversification of agriculture and industrialization of the South provide other indexes for change. And attitudes of young people are not the same as those of their parents and garndparents.

Relocation of Negro populations from the Deep South — a quarter of a million Negroes have left Mississippi in the last 10 years — has helped reduce racial tensions and is an important key to integration.

But the southern editor called it "a national tragedy" that many of the immigrants have concentrated in industrialized areas of Detroit, Chicago, Pittsburgh, and New York City where they are little better off than they were before.

Carter suggested the rest of the nation could do their part in helping reduce racial tensions by continuing to relocate Negroes from the Deep (and rural) South, and pointed out that 24 states now had few Negroes.

"Disperal of the Negro no longer is purely a regional problem, but a national one."

Carter also addressed a faculty dinner Tuesday evening and met students in a question and answer session following his assembly speech.

AFTER HE AND FELLOW NEW ENGLANDERS GO SOUTH

Constitution Dec. 10-16-56 p. 31

Editor Can't See Mississippi Integrating

Atlanta, Ga.

By CLARK SAMUEL

Editor, The Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter

BOSTON, Oct. 15 (AP)—A group of weary New England newsmen, their minds filled with conflicting pictures of life in the Deep South, arrived last night at Logan airport in a special plane after a flight from Biloxi, Mississippi.

These were the editors and publishers of weekly papers who departed from Boston last Sunday and spent a week in Mississipp as guests of its State Sovereignty Commission created by Gov, J. P

This story was written for the Associated Press by Clark Samuel, editor of the Foxboro, Mass., Reporter and leader of a group of New England newspapermen who toured Mississippi at the invitation of the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission.

Coleman to primarily interpret the state's official point of view in the segregation issue.

By bus and riverboat steamer, the newsmen were exposed to Mississippi's way of life. They talked to white and Negro leaders.

SOME LIKE ENVOYS

Traditional Southern hospitality was showered upon the visitors throughout the trip. Yet this writer must reluctantly report that in his opinion, this hospitality was abused by some of the members of the group who evidently had closed minds from the start on Mississippi's social and economic problems. Some acted and talked like northern ambassadors rather than students and observers.

However, in the group of 18, the majority were sincere in their efforts to learn, and as the day progressed they assembled a mass of factual material which they obtained by interviewing people of both colors in every walk of life—in the cotton fields and on the city streets.

I cannot see integregation happening in the state of Mississipp in my time. I believe I am in the minority among my collagues in saying this. There are too many complex problems, and the people of both races I have talked to do not seem to look forward to a mingling of Negroes and whites in the forseeable future.

On our trip we saw many new educational facilities for both white and Negro; we saw new industries obtained through "Southern" ingenuity such as tax concessions, choice locations, with ample water and transportation facilities and a compatible labor supply.

We were served in hotels and restaurants by cheerful Negroes who seemed as proud of the South and their way of life as we are of ours. They were not "Uncle Toms." They were merely people going about their daily work.

On the other hand, we talked with Negroes harvesting a bumper cotton crop whose ignorance was appalling and who appeared bewildered by our presence and our questions. Yet in their sorry plight they did not appear to be abused or underfed nor was there a Simon Legree lurking in the background.

MIXED NEIGHBORHOODS

In the cities—such as Natchez school facilities appeared to be superior, we found the homes of whites and blacks side by side on the same streets.

We can honestly report that we saw no signs of racial tension such as we have often observed in cities like Baltimore, Washington, New York and Boston. One evening we walked alone down several streets in a Negro section of a Mississippi city — something we would not dare to do as a white man in New York's Harlem. No one molested us, several said "good evnin'."

The problem as Southerners we talked to recognize it, is the continued expansion of the educational program so that both white and Negroes may be better equipped to take their places in society.

WOULD BE TRAGIC

There is no doubt in this writer's mind after many conversations with white Mississippians that these people will never accept the Supreme Court decision—they are so strong in their convictions that we can foresee only a tragic result if the decision is forced down their throats.

We talked to some highly intellectual and attractive Negro teachers at their new vocational school which was, incidentally, built before the Supreme Court decision. These teachers do not appear bitter nor unhappy. They are smartly dressed and speak with a sophistication and sense of humor which is refreshing in this troubled land. Their apartments are as well if not better furnished than our own little Cape Cod house and their libraries reveal a love of literature for its own sake.

If a comparable visit were made by a group of Southern newsmen to New England, we are confident they would find much to criticize and much to praise just as we did in the South.

EXCLUSIVE PROBLEM

The Negro in such large numbers, inconceivable to us in the North, is the exclusive problem of the Deep South in our opinion It would be hypocritical and foolhardy for any writer who has spent but a few days there to presume to tell these people how they ought to run their affairs and how to change their ways overnight.

One businessman told us that integration would increase rather than decrease their racial problem because it would completely change their entire way of living.

Perhaps we can foresee the day when by mutual agreement the two races with separate cultures and equal opportunities can live harmoniously with equal dignity upon a middle ground that recognizes human equality under our democratic system which does not force a man to break bread with anyone other than that of his own choosing regardless of whether the man is red, white, black or blue.

Ultimately I would like to see Negroes taking an active part in town, county and state government just as they now do in our federal government. Then you would have segregation with representation—just as our forefathers fought for their rights to be represented in government.

And with Mississippi's surging progress in education as well as economy, better times for both white and black are sure to come.

It will take time, patience and goodwill on four sides—Southern and Northern Negroes, Southern and Northern whites.

The Negro must be taught to accept his responsibilities as a citizen of the United States just as the white must be taught that the Negro has the right to full citizenship.

This ideal in the South can be accomplished by separate and segregated social life and a joint economic and administrative responsibility, we think.

U.S. Attorneys In Mississippi Must Back Edict

p. 19 3-70

BROWNELL MOVES EYED

Memphis,

By JOHN HERBERS

United Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., Dec. 2.—How would you like to be a United States district attorney in Mississippi?

Mon 12-3-56

That question is being asked frequently over the state and unless United States Atty. Gen. Herbert Brownell Jr. changes his ways the Republicans may be asking it seriously to fill the job—a post much in demand in the past.

Federal attorneys in the deep South are in a highly unenviable position. They have been called to Washington by Mr. Brownell to talk about forcing racial integration on buses and other common carriers.

Both In Legislature

The two United States attorneys in Mississippi—Robert Hauberg in the South District and Tom Ethridge in the North—and their several assistants are home-grown lawyers. The fact that both have been in the Mississippi Legislature speaks for itself.

In the past the Federal district attorney has been able to do his job in the South without being thrown into the segregation fight. Apparently Mr. Brownell's strategy plans will change that.

Mississippi officials pledged to maintain total segregation in defiance of Supreme Court rulings see in Mr. Brownell's plans a bold move to enforce those rulings. He contends state laws enforcing segregation of persons traveling within state lines are now "dead letters."

The bus companies, however are taking a different view.

One company official recently told the State Public Service Commission that his drivers had not been given any new instructions in light of the recent rulings from Washington. He said his company would continue to honor the state laws on intrastate travel.

New Order Instituted

Under the existing order of things it appeared the Supreme Court would go on ruling and the states would go on segregating. That, officials on this side of the struggle believe, was what caused Mr. Brownell to institute a new order.

In the past the way integration has been enforced was to let a Negro complaintant file suit in the courts which ordered him integrated. A slow process under any circumstances, it is highly unpractical in regard to transportation.

Mississippi officials believe Mr. Brownell will ask district attorneys to seek court injunctions requiring the transportation companies to ignore the state segregation laws and integrate their passengers in one grand swoop.

State leaders assume similar methods could be adopted for forcing segregation in other areas of public life.

At any rate, it would put the district attorneys in the position of either defying their boss, Mr. Brownell, or going into court and demanding segregation be ended.

Bishop Tucker Blasts Bias in Miss. Address

Courier Pittsburgh, Pa. Sat. 12-8-56

BATESVILLE, Miss.—One of the most blistering attacks ever heard in a public gathering in Mississippi against segregation and its advocates was delivered here Friday before an audience of 1,000 persons at the Georgia, West Tennessee and Mississippi annual conference by the Right Rev. C. Eubank Tucker, presiding Bishop of the Tenth Episcopal District of the AME Zion Church.

The diocese includes Tallahatchie County where Emmett Till was murdered.

The prelate, in delivering his episcopal address, spoke on "Civil Rights, Desegregation and the Prospect of Race Relations."

THE BISHOP traced the circumstances leading up to the formation of the NAACP—which grew out of the Springfield riots at the turn of the century. He spoke of the undeviating policy of this organization in fighting for justice and equality on behalf of Negroes in the United States.

Speaking of the decision of the U. S. Supreme Court on May 17, 1954, the Bishop said: "No act of any state court, or of any state legislature, can alter, change or modify that decision in any way, shape or form.

He made a bitter attack on the Talmadges, the Eastlands, the Byrneses, the Johnsons of South Carolina, the Griffins of Georgia, the Byrds and Stanleys of Virginia, the Colemans of Mississippi, and others of their ilk, who are fighting the Supreme Law of the land— and stated that when the names of these men will be relegated into political oblivion—unwept, unhonored and unsung, the cause of freedom and equality of justice will go marching on.

He concluded his address, amidst shouts and tears, by exhorting his audience to send their dollars to the home office of the NAACP in New York.

THE BISHOP read the following appointments at the close of the conference:

MEMPHIS DISTRICT: Dr. J. M. Prater, presiding elder; Warner Temple, Dr. G. L. Fauntleroy; Ford Chapel, the Rev. E. S. Johnson; Princeton Chapel, the Rev. F. Shigog; Cooper's Chapel, O. F. Santa Here By A Miracle

Defender Sat. 12-15-56

But for a miracle, the Santa Claus who gladdens the hearts of eager youngsters in the toy department of South Center department store would not be with them this year.

Behind the booming laugh, the white whiskers and the twinkling eyes lies a story of a hopeless struggle against hate, an heroic fight which nearly ended in death.

Chicago, Ill.

For the South Center Santa is Gus Courts, target of bullets fired by racist boodlums through the window of his small store in Belzoni, Miss.

Gus Courts, whose happy voice now urges "good will to all men" made national headlines by being the victim of bad will from a few men. The only thing he did to merit that hatred was to stand up for his rights.

STORY TOLD

His story has been told over and over again in the months since he was shot down while his horrified wife and a neighbor looked on helplessly. His name has been entered in the records of Congress and his courage has become a byword to people still oppressed.

Yet, such a story will bear retelling once more: How Gus Courts, a grocer in Belzoni, felt that he had an obligation to speak out for his rights and to urge other Negroes to join him by registering to vote.

Courts' activities found ill-favor with his white neighbors and they set out to "put him in his place."

First, they tried to ask him out of his beliefs, but to no avail. Then they tried a more powerful weapon — economic pressure. the rent on Courts' store was raised and finally he was forced to secure another location.

MARKED MAN

It is a testament to his courage that not once did he think of abandoning his efforts to exercise the right to vote — and he kept on trying despite the knowledge that he had become a marked man.

Then, one night Gus Courts' number came to the top. A car, bearing four or five still unidentified white men, drove past the store and a gun blast felled the brave grocer.

But Courts was not ready to die. Rushed to the hospital, he recovered while an inept and half-hearted attempt was made to discover the would-be assassins. They were never found.

GUS COURTS AS SANTA CLAUS

Today, Courts lives in Chicago He is constantly in demand as a speaker, letting all who would hear know the true story of racial tensions in Mississippi.

VICTIM OF HATRED

The little children who sit on his knee and ask for presents cannot know the horror through which their Santa has come; they could not comprehend the venom of the hatred unleased against him.

But Gus Courts knows. And he knows that something must be done to wipe out the conditions which caused him to flee Misissippi in fear of his life. He knows that the children who come to him must be protected from hate and fear.

In this Christmas season of 1956, Courts, like millions of others, extends to everyone a greeting for peace and happiness, but somehow there seems to be a special plea, born of bitter knowledge, in his voice when he sings out: "Good will to all."

FBI Is Lax In Mississippi's Race Killings, Leader Says

Sat. 1-28-56 Wilmington, N.C.

LOS ANGELES (ANP) — Despite a protest from FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, Dr. T. R. M. Howard said he is sticking to his charges that the FBI has been lax in solving Mississippi racial killings.

"It is strange that Mr. Hoover instead of assuring the terroized Negroes in Dixie that they can receive protection and can get justice, prefers to make personal attack at me which seems to be politically during an interview."

nesday by the FBI office at Memphis, accused the Mound Bayou, Miss., physician of "false and irresponsible" statements against the FBI and demanded that he prove or retract them.

The FBI director particularly resented Dr. Howard's public statement, in regard to the recent slaying of three Negroes in Mississippi, that:

"We must find out why southern investigators of the FBI can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved."

Hoover denied the charge and said that his agents hold "full and impartial investigations" in every case, at the direction of the Department of Justice, and found that no civil rights violations were involved.

Dr. Howard, president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, insisted that FBI agent in Mississippi are from that state and naturally are partial to whites. He declared:

"I will stand on the national capitol and tell Hoover that we don't feel that to take a man who has been brought up in an environment such as we have in Mississippi and give him a few weeks or years of training is going to change the individual into a fair and impartial investigator where the two races are involved."

the peace and order of society. So the Commandment, "Thou shalt not steal" becomes basic to the peace and order of society, even to protection against murder itself.

In the third place, the URGE TO MAKE OF ONE'S LIFE SOMETHING AGREEABLE AND PLEASING TO THE INDIVIDUAL, necessitates harmony with in the group or society in which one lives. Hence, the Commandments, "Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor," and "Thou shalt not covet anything of thy neighbor's," indicate how mutual, personal relations are vital to socialized living.

It would take us too far into the history of the growth of the law to trace the variations of those basic ideas in all the peoples of the earth. Suffice it to say that from Babylon and Tyre, Ancient Persia, Egypt and the tribes of Africa, they are found in variations as to the punishments imposed as they were felt or known to affect the lives of the special people involved.

It is from Rome, Greece and Israel that we have inherited our law, both subjective or fundamental and adjective or the procedure by which the laws are operated. Democracy accepts the basic laws but imposes the will of the people in legislative assemblies, small and local, or large and sovereign as commonwealths and as a nation. The simplication of the rules of procedure announced by the Supreme Court of the United States, shows how the adjective law is modified by the people in their development, while the basic law remains as of divine origin to square with the Ten Commandments. It is not too much to say, that EVERY LAW IMPOSED BY ANY AUTHORITY,——that does not square with that basic law, is doomed to repeal, either by the mutations of time, the wisdom and courage of the courts, or a demand for a change by the people. ONE DOES NOT KNOW WHAT FACTOR MAY BE THE CAUSE OF A CHANGE OF SENTIMENT BY THE SOVEREIG PEOPLE IN WHOM HE LOVE OF JUSTICE, TRUTH AND FREEDOM SPRINGS ETERNAL AS FROM THEIR CREATOR.

IT IS AT THIS POINT, MY FRIENDS, THAT THE NEGRO HAS PLAYED SO IMPORTANT A PART IN AMERICAN JUDICIAL PROCEDURE. The harshness of the English law at the time when Africans were being kidnapped to be sold on this continent, at the close of the 16th and beginning of the 18th century,..——forced the people who had become familiar with the Bible, through its translation into English in 1538, to migrate to these barren shores. Hence, they were supplied with concrete instances of the principle of men of different hues, as children of a common God-Creator. It tested their sense of justice, right and truth, as no mere wordy argument could have done. It was the Quakers or Society of Friends who thus first became convinced of the work necessary to christianize their brothers in black and assert the oneness of humanity in 1688.

Clashes, so common an occurence in a new land, showed the essential human likeness in black and white. Heroisms, loyalties and sacrifices made by Negroes in the early and hard times of the American settlers, served to forge the chains of human brotherhood. Even slaveholders could not kill their chattel with impunity. As a preservation of the rights of the dominant class among themselves, the salveholders were held responsible for many acts of their blacks. Thus the Negro WAS UNKNOWINGLY REGISTERING in the minds of the judges, that justice was above the law. When the movement towards freedom came to a head in 1776, the more advanced states among the original thirteen, made no distinctions among free persons. In Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New Jersey and North Carolina,..——men of color meeting the requrements as to property, voted for the Constitution. Further, it is to be noted that in those states less religious, more greedy and less humane, founded largely by adventurers bent upon exploiting both nature and men, there was no such justice and there was no such enlightenment even in secular affairs.

It is historical that Queen Elizabeth was persuaded by John Hawkins to aid him in selling slaves to the colonies in 1562, because "He represented to her that they could be thus christianized," whereas Hawkins' real interest was in the great profit involved. Slaves were held valuable because of their capability as laborers at the lowest cost to themselves. Here, then we have the African an unconscious agent in the economic progress of the new nation, and modifying its judicial procedure because of his double status as thing and as human being. Such a dual status arose in drafting the Constitution of this country, and Hamilton's compromise, 1785, in calling them "persons of color," laid the basis for emancipation, and the 13th Amendment covering those not yet free at that time, 1862.

Action By Public Officials Asked In Mississippi

OTHER BILLS STUDIED

Sat. 3-24-56

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 23.—The Mississippi Senate Friday approved a bill which calls on every public official to "give full force and effect" to the state's recently adopted resolution of interposition.

The bill enjoins every official, from governor to alderman, to "prohibit by any lawful, peaceful and constitutional means integration of the races in public schools, public parks, waiting rooms, amusement and recreational places and any public place."

Proposal Reconsidered

The House reconsidered Thursday's passage of a bill creating a board of water commissioners and accepted an amendment by Representatives John French of Panola County and Joe Wroten of Washington County to remove possible establishment of "vested rights" in water use.

Mr. French said the original measure allowed persons using water from public water sources at the time of its passage to continue using it forever.

Representative Maurice Black of Carroll County steered to passage a bill requiring persons voting in bond issue elections to present their poll tax receipts at the time of voting. It was objected to by Mr. Wroten on ground the bill's purpose is "to defeat bond issues."

Representative W. H. Johnson Jr. of Newton County gained passage of a bill raising salaries of county attorneys, while Representative James Baxter of Lauderdale County steered to passage a bill permitting school districts to acquire land and erect buildings outside their boundaries.

A Senate bill changing the board of trustees of a new hospital for aflicted children was handled by Representative Chris Faser of Montgomery County. It replaces a five-member layman board for the ex-officio group composed of the Governor, attorney general and secretary of state.

An amendment provides that there is to be no distinction between children afflicted with cerebral palsy and other crippling conditions.

Agency Name Changed

The name of the institution is being changed from the Mississippi Crippled Children's Hospital to the Mississippi Hospital School for Cerebral Palsy. Mrs. John Farese, state senator of Ashland, is author of the bill.

Senator Stanton Hall of Hattiesburg handled two juridiciary balls in that branch. One forces law enforcement officers to file charges against persons arrested within 72 hours or release them, and permits juries to fix punishment at less than life or death in rape cases.

Senator Hall said some juries are reluctant to convict rapists because of the life-or-death penalty.

Other Senate action included:

Permit use of recording machines by court reporters, authorize creation of a county court in ee County (Tupelo) and raise state veterinarian's salaries.

Symbol of Hope Seen in Career of Mississippi Negro

World Telegram & Sun Sat. 3-31-56 P. 2 New York, N. Y.

By ANDREW TULLY,
Scripps-Howard Staff Writer.

GREENVILLE, Miss., March 31.—In darkly segregationist Mississippi, Doctor Robertson, Negro, is a symbol of hope — a symbol of economic respectability that could lead his race to social acceptance.

Doctor is his given name—he is not a physician but an odd-job man who verges on being a contractor. He is 55, an amiably efficient individual, and an illustration of how conditions have improved for the Negro in the last 25 years, even in Mississippi.

"I'm doing all right," says Doctor. "I got no kicks. They let me alone." "They" are the white folks.

Northern Standards.

In this city of 35,000 which is half Negro, Doctor is doing all right even by some northern standards.

As a full-time gardener employed by a moderately well-to-do white family, Doctor earns $40 a week. He's paid an extra $3 weekly to chauffeur the family's cook to and from work. He buttles for $5 a night. He owns a small truck which he rents out during the cotton-cutting season. He owns a duplex home, and he rents out half of it.

Doctor Robertson figures he grosses $250 a month—whereas 25 years ago he would have had to struggle to earn $40 a month. Besides the truck, he owns a 1952 Chevrolet hardtop, and he has $800 in the bank.

Not Whole Story.

This is not the whole Negro story in Mississippi by a long shot. Scores of thousands of the 986,000 Negroes in the state still live in squalor in the towns and cities and in cotton-field shacks, sleeping three and four to a bed.

But Doctor Robertson is an illustration of the fact that all is not midnight bad in Mississippi. For he, with a number like him, has taken the first step toward winning acceptance from the whites—the maintenance of a decent, hygienic and moral standard of living. Things ARE better for the Negro, however scantily.

Doctor Robertson reads slowly, and he is a registered voter. He is one of 2000 Negroes on the voting lists of Washington County; 25 years ago there were not 2000 Negro voters in the entire state. Twenty years ago, the Greenville newspaper, the Delta Democrat, had only 500 Negro subscribers out of 4000. Today its circulation of 15,000 includes 6000 Negroes.

Unionized.

These days, a good proportion of skilled Negro workers are unionized. Negro carpenters and Negro bricklayers are paid the same scale as their white counterparts.

Hodding Carter, editor of the Democrat, will tell you that the life expectancy of the Negro in Mississippi has risen 10 years in the last 25.

More, the whites have recognized that the Negro must be consulted on certain things. Although biracial meetings are anathema to most white southerners, numerous sessions were held with Negro leaders to sell them on a bond issue to build a factory for a rug plant, which moved here from Yonkers, N. Y. Incidentally, 150 of the plant's 1000 employees are Negroes, drawing the same pay for the same job, and working in the same rooms with whites.

Mississippi's progress during the past 25 years is not much by Northern standards, or even by the standards of its more liberal Southern neighbors. Probably 90 percent of the whites still violently oppose integration, and the Negro is kept cruelly in his place.

But it is a start. And as one liberal planter put it, "after all, this IS Mississippi."

College Prexy Criticised By Southerner

Defender P. 3 Sat. 8-4-56 Chicago, Ill.

MARKS, Miss. — A college president here who recently scored Cong. Adam Clayton Powell (D, N. Y.) for refusing to pose with Maxine Perryman, representative of the Cotton Makers Jubilee, was heavily criticized for "being a Mississippi school-man in the most outlaw state in the union."

The criticism was leveled at Dr. J. H. White, president of Mississippi Vocational college.

Dr. White had charged previously that Cong. Powell had "insulted every Negro woman in the South" when he refused to pose for a picture with Miss Perryman.

Dr. White referred to an April 6 incident in Port au Prince, Haiti, where Powell and Miss Perryman, a representative of the Cotton Jubilee, were present together at the American embassy for tea.

Miss Perryman, a student at Mississippi Vocational college, reported to President White that Powell "signed my scroll, but refused to take a picture with me."

Shortly after Dr. White made public a letter in which he "scolded" the New York congressman, another Mississippi resident, Elex Johnson, accused Dr. White of being a "Mississippi school-man in the most outlaw state in the union.

"Dr. White has bowed to the lot," said Johnson. "He has, as have hundreds of Negro teachers in the South, forsaken the race.

"What type of children will they produce in the next generation?"

Union Aids Mississippi Undertaker

Defender P. 3 Sat. 2-25-56 Chicago, Ill.

NEW YORK — A Mississippi undertaker who is threatened with loss of his business because he signed an anti-segregation petition —which makes him target for the economic boycott by a White Citizens Council — received $5,000 last week as a loan from a New York trade union.

Local 1199, Retail Drug Employes Union, mailed the $5,000 check as a loan to R. D. Drew, of Clarksdale, Miss.

The union's loan will help Drew pay off a $3,000 loan from a Clarksdale bank. The bank loan was made several months ago. It was to be payable in three years, but after Drew signed a petition for integrated schools in Clarksdale, the bank demanded immediate payment on threat of foreclosure.

Drew is also chairman of the Clarksdale chapter of the NAACP.

Mississippi Unit Hits 'Falsehoods' On Segregation

Advertiser P.2-C Wed. 6-13-56

JACKSON, Miss., June 12 (AP)—The State Sovereignty Commission today made its first attempt to "explode the falsehoods that have grown to be accepted as truths" about segregation in Mississippi.

Hal DeCell, SSC public relations director, issued personal invitations to dozens of northern newspapermen to visit Mississippi and "see the situation for themselves."

DeCell, former editor of the Deer Creek Pilot and campaign manager for Gov. J. P. Coleman, said all Mississippi asks is "fairness and a chance to present its side of the case.

"We make no claim of being completely without fault — what state is?

"However, the continuation of utterly false accusations against our state and its people has led to the creation of a public relations department of the State Sovereignty Commission to aid in the dissemination of truth about Mississippi to fair-minded citizens of our nation."

They Banish One Of Their Own

Afro-American Sat. 3-10-56 P.B

In Mississippi these days, all you have to do is hint that you believe in justice and fair play, and you are subject to being run out of town—white and colored alike.

Baltimore, Md.

JACKSON, Miss.

I'm departing this sad country, and so, in a week or so, will the Rev. Marsh Calloway, 60, a Presbyterian minister in the cotton belt ever since his ordination; the last 15 years at Columbia and Shaw, Miss., and last of all at the First Presbyterian Church of Durant in Holmes County.

The white Citizens' Council of Holmes County is chasing the Rev. Mr. Calloway out. No one can count the number of colored persons he follows on this sad exodus.

But this time, the Citizens' Councils are turning on one of their own; the Rev. Mr. Calloway will depart still believing that segregation is just and proper and permanent for the Mississippi delta.

Marsh Calloway believed in all the traditions of the South, and he believed, too, that it was a man's duty to defend a friend in trouble. That is the crime for which he is being exiled.

HE FIRST met Dr. David Minter when Minter was 14 and his father was minister of a Presbyterian church in Austin, Texas. They did not become neighbors again until Mr. Calloway came to Durant last Easter and found David Minter operating a clinic at New Providence Farm in the wasteland near Tchula.

Last Sept. 26, the Citizens' Councils called a meeting of Tcula citizens to drive David Minter out of the county as a suspected integrationist.

Mr. Calloway went there and spoke just twice. The first time he asked just what moral and legal right those present had to conduct such a meeting.

The second time was near the end when he arose again to say that he had known David Minter longer than anyone present and that he was a fine Christian gentleman.

THREE DAYS later, Wilburn, Hooker, of the executive committee of the Citizens' Council of the Third Congressional District of Mississippi, went to Durant to seek out the elders of the First Presbyterian Church.

None of the elders had been present that night in Tchula; they met with Willburn Hooker and voted 5-1 to ask the congregation to rid itself of Marsh Calloway.

The charge was involving himself in politics. One elder told Mr. Calloway that Hooker had reported he had gone over to the n——rs.

The elders' decision was not, of course, controlling; they must first lay their charges before the congregation of First Presbyterian and then before a special meeting of the Presbytery of Central Mississippi.

THEN HOOKER was gone, and the elders were alone with themselves and some of them softened. They agreed not to call the congregation; Mr. Calloway could find another church and then depart gracefully.

As an honorable man, he began his hunt; Mississippi had nothing to offer; he was turning towards Tennessee or Texas when his period of grace was cut short.

A week or so later, the Durant elders had another visit from a Citizens' Council missionary. This one carried the autobiography of Sherwood Eddy, the churchman who had first brought David Minter to the delta.

It was all there in the book how this man—a friend of the pastor's—had come to Holmes County to whip up the colored people.

And so the elders called their congregation to meet just after Sunday School one week-end and moved to oust Mr. Calloway forthwith. The pastor could expect to see more of his flock together than had faced him over the last six weeks.

The First Presbyterian Church of Durant had 60 members; since he spoke out at Tchula, Mr. Calloway had never preached to a congregation of more than a dozen.

HE HAD BEEN in Texas visiting his son; he came back to Durant to face his condemnation.

"It won't be a hearing, just a vote. I'll be there for the church service afterwards. I won't say anything about the decision; "I'll just preach a gospel sermon."

He could not, he said over the telephone, find it in his heart to blame them. "I suppose they're skeered."

No, nothing that could happen would change his view of segregation.

"There shouldn't be integration down here. They are getting along all right."

And still, Mr. Calloway said, had he known the consequences, he would still have said what he said at Tchula: "I didn't sell my brithright as a citizen when I came here. They have to learn that every American has a certain amount of rights and privileges."

DR. J. W. HOWELL Durant's only druggist, was the leading spirit among the elders who began Marsh Calloway's process of banishment.

He answers any questions with: "Who're you? I have nothing to say one way or another." His is not a course a man can be asked to defend; the Citizens' Councils are not people happy in daylight.

No stranger can say how deep the passions that tear Mississippi must be. David Minter, facing exile, was commenting the other day about the Citizens' Council assertion that the colored persons are happy here.

He had been treating a 97-year-old colored woman As she lay in bed, she pronounced what were nearly her last words: "Doctor, do you think we'll ever get them civil rights?" David Minter lives by the rules; he probably did not feel even then that he could answer her.

THERE IS A cigarette machine in the cafe at Jackson Airport. Under its Phillip Morris slot someone has crayoned the letters "NAACP."

Packages of the Philip Morris Co.—boycotted without explanation by the white Citizens' Councils—run right to the top of the glass.

A colored porter cleans the surface of the machine every night; he would not, if he wanted, wipe off the crayoned warning.

This intruder put his 30 cents in, collected his Philip Morrises and went to the plane. The last thing you see in the way station for the fastest way out of Mississippi is that short message of hate.

SCHOOLS IN LINE OF FIRE

P.17

By KEITH FULLER
Associated Press Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss., April 22.—There is mounting evidence that Mississippi's segregation will be attacked in the courts, on the local level, before the year is out.

Just what the planners of litigation will consider the opportune time is not known.

NAACP Vows Integration

The NAACP, without stuttering, is vowed to break down the South's traditional separation of the races. Mississippi is among the last states to be challenged undoubtedly because of nearly unanimous opposition among its white people to integration. Also, the NAACP may be fighting a lack of interest among Mississippi Negroes.

But signs point to the possibility that Mississippi's turn is near at hand.

It is even safe to say that when a suit is filed it will be against the school districts of either Jackson, Clarksdale, Vicksburg, Natchez or Yazoo City—or any combination of them.

Medgar Evers, field secretary of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said that whenever suits are contemplated, in Mississippi or elsewhere, the information will be a "closely guarded secret known only to the people involved."

Volunteer Action Preferred

Evers said the NAACP prefers for a state to break down color barriers voluntarily but—failing in that — the organization will back Negro parents of any school district to win them the right to attend the best schools in the district.

Evers said contrary to popular belief, the NAACP does not institute a suit until the people of the district indicate their desire for it.

Then NAACP attorneys carry the ball.

He did say flatly, in answer to a question, there are many districts in Mississippi where Negro parents have this desire.

A number of legislators hinted that they knew of planned action regarding integration suits and hastened to produce legislation that would tend to arm the state against such action.

Asked if they could have information of this kind Evers said he doubted it unless it came from people within the NAACP who acted more or less as spies.

The projected sites of the suits is simple enough—the five Mississippi cities mentioned above are the only ones petitioned for integration. These petitions are a year old this fall and, of course, the cities have taken no steps toward integration of the white schools nor do they plan any.

Thus the clash is inevitable.

Ex-Detroit 'American' Gives His Views

White Northerner Goes South And Becomes a 'Southerner'

Pittsburgh Pa.

Sat. 2-25-56

By MARC CRAWFORD

DETROIT, Mich.—A Clarksdale (Miss.) grocer, defended the attitudes and action of his state's white supremacists in an interview with The Courier last week.

Philip Sawaya, 45, a former Detroit resident, was in the Motor City visiting relatives on Neal Street. Sawaya says he considers himself a Mississippian now, having lived there for fifteen years. The grocer also disclosed his complete accord with the way the Mississippi racial situation is handled.

Miss.

On the question of whether Negro veterans of the wars in defense of the United States deserved democracy in Mississippi, Sawaya said, "The 'Negras' have democracy in Mississippi, just like we do. They have theirs, and we have ours.

"All the trouble in Mississippi is the work of Northern 'Negra' agitators and Northern politicians. The 'Negras' and whites don't have any problem in Mississippi. They got their freedom, and we got ours. We like our 'Negras.'

"WHY, WHEN A 'Negra's' out of work and ain't got no money there, all he's got to do is go to his white boss who will give him $25. I bet no Northern 'Negras' can do that. Socially, the 'Negras' want to be left alone just like we do. The South's got its way to live and the North's got its way and ain's nobody got no right to try to change it.

"The reason we don't want N---rs going to our schools, for one thing, is they ain't got the money to keep their children there. Hell, it costs me $700 a year to keep my kid in school, and most 'Negras' don't make that much a year. They'd take em out of school anyway at plantin' and pickin' time.

"If they tell you 'Negras' can't vote in Mississippi, they're lying. Well any 'Negra' can vote there. I wish you'd come to Mississippi for a week to see for yourself. I'll sleep you and feed you for a week.

(The invitation was declined).

"AS TO THAT Till 'Negra,' what would you have done if he'd tried to rape your wife?

"No, we ain't got no 'Negras' in Clarksdale holding office or city office jobs. Well, there ain't one 'Negro' in Clarksdale got enough brains to hold the lowest office."

Sawaya, whose parents come from Syria, claimed to have been threatened by some Negroes since his visit here.

The house where Sawaya is visiting is in a so-called "mixed" neighborhood.

"This is a country of free speech and democracy. I'm a free-born American citizen and I'm entitled to that respect either in Mississippi or Michigan. I could call the law, but I ain't going to agitate like Northerners do. But I don't take nothing off nobody anywhere.

"WE BUILT an $82,000 Catholic school for 'Negras' in Clarksdale, now that shows how much we think of 'em," Sawaya concluded.

He claims he's not a member of the White Citizens Council, but he does not condemn them.

Signal Honor For Senator, Resolution Says

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., March 12.—Senator James O. Eastland's elevation to the chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee was unanimously commended Monday by the Mississippi House of Representatives.

Memphis, Tenn.

The resolution, offered by most of the House members headed by Speaker Walter Sillers, remains for Senate consideration.

"The United States Senate has not only signally honored Senator Eastland, but has placed its emphatic stamp of approval upon his loyalty, ability, patriotism, zeal, integrity and unswerving devotion to duty," the resolution read by Speaker Sillers said.

The document asserted that the elevation of the senior Mississippi senator has "placed him where he rightfully belongs with that immortal galaxy of great Mississippians who have preceded him in the Senate and who so nobody served Mississippi and the nation."

It commended Senator Eastland for his fights for constitutional government, state sovereignty, segregation, against letting down the immigration bars, for his investigation of subversives which "has exposed some of the top National Association for the Advancement of Colored People leaders with subversive and communist fronts."

'We'll Close Colleges First,' Coleman Says

Wed. 2-22-56

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 21. — (AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman said Tuesday it "is as inevitable as the sunise" that Mississippi would close its institutions of higher learning if they were forced to accept Negro students.

He told his press conference rtate colleges must be operated "with a decent regard for the people who support them."

"The people would not support integrated schools. To allow integration is to destroy schools.

"Right or wrong, it's an inescaable fact. It's impossible to get a Negro into a white school in Mississippi."

Memphis, Tenn.

The Mississippi Constitution already permits the Legislature to abolish white public elementary or high schools faced with accepting Negro students.

Governor Coleman said the Legislature would order closed any college faced with integration. Appropriations could be cut off, he added.

The Governor charged the press with "making matters worse" by "continued agitation of the (segregation) question."

He established a new press conference rule: "We will not discuss segregation unless there is a new development to justify it, because the more you agitate this old sore the worse it gets."

Then, he announced signing two more bills to help keep Negroes out of white society. He had sponsored the bills as a member of the Legal Education Advisory Committee last year.

They would permit choice of customers or clients and would require railroad and bus companies to provide separate waiting rooms for Negro and white passengers traveling within Mississippi.

Eastland Asks Public Funds To Wage Integration Fight

Fri. 4-27-56 P. 2-A

Montgomery

TUPELO, Miss., April 26 (AP)—Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss) today called for the use of public funds —"and we have a legal right to do so" — to fight integration.

Addressing the 1st Dist. convention of the Mississippi American Legion, Eastland said the South can no longer stay on the defensive.

"The opposition has several million dollars," he said. "We must use public funds and we have a legal right to do so because in essence this is an attack upon the South.

"The first duty of the state is to protect its sovereignty. We must bring to the attenion of the people what integration will do to our school system."

The Mississippi Legislature recently voted $250,000 to finance the work of a newly created State Sovereignty Commission for the avowed purpose of resisting federal "encroachment" in any form. form.

The senator said the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is "a front, an action group. Behind it is a more powerful group directing its every move."

He did not identify the directing group.

He said border states—those between the segregated South and the integrated North and Midwest —have "weak-kneed political leaders."

He said "if we can win the border states I am confident of the outcome. The determination of the South has caused the people of the North to stop and think. Now they say 'We had better go slowly.'

"The average man thinks exactly as we do. We are not going to permit NAACP agitators to take over and run our states."

The senator said segregation fights are being waged in the North "and the outcome there will determine what happens here."

Eastland said the last thing Mississippi will do is to permit the NAACP to play a political game at the expense of "our children."

"The first line of defense is the home," he said. "If we lose the minds of children there is no hope for the future."

Coleman Ignores Benson On Mississippi Flight

Defender Sat. 2-4-56 P. 10

Chicago Ill.

J. P. Coleman, newly elected governor of Mississippi, said Friday he would ignore a letter from Chicago disc jockey Al Benson requesting permission to "bomb" Mississippi with reprints of the U. S. Constitution from a private chartered plane on Lincoln's birthday.

Coleman, when queried by a news service Friday, said he had not received Benson's letter at the time.

In Chicago, Benson said Coleman's statement came as no surprise to him.

"He and other Mississippi officials have in the past ignored both the letter and the spirit of the United States Constitution. I shall continue to make my plans for the flight. Meanwhile, I shall await Gov. Coleman's reply or that of his attorney general," Benson said.

Earlier the Mississippi-born disc jockey released a communication from C. J. Lowen, U. S. Administrator of Civil Aeronautics in reply to a letter from Benson who wants to "penetrate" what he calls the "Ironic Curtain" in protest against the recent wave of slayings and economic persecutions of Negro citizens and NAACP leaders in Mississippi.

Lowen's letter informed Benson that regulations do not prohibit "the dropping of newspapers, periodicals or objects of any other kind, provided reasonable precautions are taken to avoid injury or damage to persons or property."

The CAA Administrator warned Benson, however, that "there may be local laws which prohibit such activities unless authorization is obtained from the state or municipal authorities." Lowen suggested that Benson contact local authorities in Mississippi for information as to whether such permission is necessary or available.

WRITES MISS. GOVERNOR

On receipt of the CAA communications, Benson dispatched letters of inquiry to Coleman, Atty.-Gen. Joe T. Patterson, the Secretary of State and the Director of the Highway Department.

Benson said that, if all clearances are granted, he would emplane on Lincoln's Birthday, probably from Memphis.

Benson, 48, has lived in Chicago for the last 25 years and broadcasts over a local radio station. He has professed alarm at the opposition to desegregation in his native state and at such incidents as the Emmett Till slaying case.

DEMAND INTERCEPTION

City officials of Meridian demanded that the Mississippi commissioner of public safety, Col. T. B. Birdsong, send up a Highway Patrol plane to intercept Benson.

Birdsong said he had received offers of private planes to "help out" in an interception, but he preferred to "ignore" the Chicagoan.

"We could stop him but I don't think it would be worthwhile," Birdsong said.

Negro Plans Shower for Mississippi

Constitution Wed. 2-22-56

Atlanta, Ga.

CHICAGO, Feb. 21 (UP)— Disc Jockey Al Benson prepared today to drop copies of the U. S. Constitution on the state of Mississippi from the air, but was threatened with retaliation from the South.

Benson, a Negro native of Mississippi, said he plans to fly over the state on Washington's birthday tomorrow to emphasize the U. S. Supreme Court decision on school desegregation.

COUNTER RAID HINTED

Mississippi officials chose to "ignore" Benson's flight, but a threat of retaliation came from disc jockey Allan English of Oxford, Miss.

English said that if Benson "bombs" Mississippi he will stage a counter raid to dump Confederate flags on Chicago.

Benson said he plans to take off from here about 10 a.m. CST tomorrow in a chartered plane and drop his leaflets on the cities of Jackson, Meridian and Vicksburg. He refused to disclose the exact time he expects to fly over the three "target" cities.

5,000 COPIES FOR $375

"It's none of their business," he said.

Benson said he obtained 5,000 copies of the Constitution from the Government Printing Office for $375 and the plane, chartered from a private flying service here, will cost him $448.71.

Negro Disc Jockey Stays Home

P. 2

CHICAGO, Feb. 22 (UP) — A Chicago disc jockey, expressing fears for his safety, stayed home today and sent a private pilot to drop copies of the U. S. Constitution on Mississippi.

Raleigh, N.C.

Al Benson, a Negro native of Mississippi, had planned to fly over the southern state himself to emphasize the U. S. Supreme court decision on school desegregation. Instead he sent Jim Crea, owner of a charter flying service whom he had hired for the flight, to make the trip alone.

Crea planned to drop 5,000 copies of the constitution on the city of Jackson. Miss. He flew a single-engine plane.

Issuing a statement to explain his switch in plans, Benson said; "Threats of both physical harm and legal persecution have come from unofficial sources."

"I am not a coward," Benson said, "but neither am I a fool nor a law breaker."

Negro Gets Stand-In To 'Bomb'

Constitution Thurs. 2-23-56 P. 6

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 22 (UP)—A private plane dispatched by a Chicago Negro disc jockey to emphasize the Supreme Court ban on school segregation showered hundreds of copies of the U.S. Constitution on Jackson late today.

Atlanta, Ga.

Al Benson, a native of Mississippi, sponsored the flight. He had planned to fly over the state himself but at the last minute he expressed fear for his safety and sent Jim Crea, owner of a Chicago flying service, to make the "air raid" alone.

AT 1,500 FEET

Crea's red and cream single-engine Navion plane swooped over the city several times at about 1,500 feet, dropping the majority of the 5,000 copies Benson had purchased from the Government Printing Office.

Many of the 43-page booklets drifted into the Pearl River swamp just east of the city. And there was only mild interest shown by pedestrians and home owners when the pamphlets came trickling down shortly before 5 p.m. CST. Crea's plane winged eastward to Meridian, Miss., where another "raid" was scheduled.

Meanwhile, a Mississippi white disc jockey said he plans a counter "raid" on Chicago Friday. Allan English, a record spinner for Oxford, Miss., radio station WSUH, said he would scatter 25,000 miniature Confederate flags on the Loop and lake front in Chicago.

Originally, he had planned to drop 10,000 of the paper flags but he said "response" had been so great he decided to up the number.

WOULD EASE TENSION

"I hope this little stunt will in some way cool the intensity of the racial situation," English said. He contended "all Mississippians are familiar with the Constitution" and Benson's flight was not necessary.

State officials ignored Benson's flight and said there would be no attempt to intercept the plane.

In Chicago, Benson issued a statement explaining his decision to not make the flight personally. He claimed "threats of both physical harm and legal persecution" had come from "unofficial sources."

Mississippi Ignores 'Bomber'

JACKSON, Miss.—(UP)—Col. T. B. Birdsong, state commissioner of public safety, politely turned down a request Tuesday to send up a highway patrol plane to intercept a Chicago Negro disc jockey who plans a pamphlet "air raid" over Mississippi Wednesday.

Wed. 2-22-56

Al Benson, a native of Mississippi, plans to drop 5,000 copies of the U. S. Constitution over Jackson, Meridian and Vicksburg to give support to the U. S. Supreme Court anti-segregation rulings. He will make the flight from Chicago in a chartered private plane.

P. 8-A

"We're just going to ignore him," Birdsong said. "Let him drop them. We could stop him but I don't think it would be worthwhile."

Miami, Fla.

Birdsong said there had been offers of private planes to "help out."

Meridian city officials, who threatened to arrest Benson if he lands, had called on the patrol to intercept Benson who plans to leave Chicago at about 10 a.m.

Meridian officials contended state and city law prohibits dropping leaflets from a plane but a Civil Aeronautics Administration official said it probably would take a lawsuit to halt Benson's flight.

CAA safety supervisor Frank Wignall said the pamphlets could be dropped, provided "reasonable precautions are taken to avoid injury to persons and property." It would be necessary, he said, to prove the flight was hazardous to halt it.

'Bombing' of Three Mississippi Cities Is Planned by Chicago Disc Jockey

(Special to The Times-Picayune)

MERIDIAN, Miss., Feb. 20—State highway patrol planes may be called out to prevent the "bombing" of Vicksburg, Jackson and Meridian Wednesday.

Meridian city officials said Monday that if Al Benson, a Chicago, Ill., disc jockey, carries out his plan to hire a light plane and bombard the three cities with leaflets as a fight for integration, he will be arrested when and if he lands in Meridian.

Benson announced his plans to drop the leaflets, copies of the United States constitution, over his Chicago radio show. He said he would bomb the cities on Washington's birthday as support for the supreme court's integration decision.

City officials said there is a city and a state law against dropping leaflets, and that they will be enforced.

And leaflets rained down on Mississippi

CHICAGO — Al Benson's "Freedom Flight"—to bomb the state of Mississippi with reprints of the U.S. Constitution—took off from Midway Airport Wednesday morning.

Although the Chicago disc jockey did not personally make the trip, he made good on his promise to "air-raid" the Dixie state.

Pilot Jim Crea and his assistant, Peter Dekelaita, left the airstrip in a single-motor Navion at 10:14 a.m. to proceed to Jackson, refuel and begin distribution over Jackson and back to the Tennessee state line.

Chartering of the plane cost Benson $471 and the 5,000 reprints purchased from the Government Printing Office in Washington came to a total of $375.

Mississippi Grand Jury Asks Screening Of Integration Books

Advertiser Montgomery Ala.

Fri. 3-2-56

ELLISVILLE, Miss., March 1 (AP)—The grand jury for the first district of Jones County today proposed the elimination of all pro-integration books in public school libraries in the county and throughout the state.

P. 11-A

The investigative body said in its report that a screening of all books in the school libraries should be done thoroughly enough to prevent any "camouflaged materials from getting to these students."

The grand jury report said in part:

CASTS DOUBTS

"It has been brought to the attention of the grand jury that many of our young people are in various school libraries which tend to cast doubt and reflection upon our Southern way of life, and which in a fictional sense support the views of the integration of the races. . .

"Proponents of integration, through many book companies and publishing houses, are using books in our schools and among our children as a Trojan force to tear down the teachings and principles of our way of life. . .

BEST INTERESTS

"In the belief that the time has come when all must assert themselves in support of that which we know to be for our best interest, we recommend to our state superintendent of education, to our county superintendent of education and to the superintendents of our separate school districts, that serious thought be given to the screening of all books, magazines and periodicals used in our school system that may reflect criticism on our way of life."

Bernard Powell, Jones County school superintendent, said screening of all library books used in the county will begin immediately.

He supervises 27 elementary and 14 high schools, of which five each are Negro schools.

"The people would not support integrated schools," Coleman said, speaking for his state 1,600,000 citizens, half of whom are Negroes.

He told reporters that state colleges must be operated "with a decent regard for the people who support them."

Atlanta, Ga.

"Right or wrong," he added, "It's an inescapable fact. To allow integration is to destroy schools."

The Mississippi Constitution already permits the legislature to close public elementary or high schools faced with accepted Negro students,

Coleman said the legislature also would close any college faced with integration. Apprprations would be cut off, he added.

The governor charged the press with "making matters worse" by "continued agitation of the segregation) question."

He established a new press conference rule:

"We will not discuss segregation unless there is a new development to justify it, because the more you agitate this old sore the worse it gets."

Then he announced that he had signed two more bills to prevent the mixing of the Negro and white races in Mississippi. They would permit the choice of customers or clients and would require railroad and bus companies to provide separate waiting rooms for Negro and white passengers traveling within the Mississippi.

Earlier in the week, Coleman vetoed one of the bills he had originally sponsored -- a measure aimed at restricting civil rights investigations by the FBI.

He said in a veto message that "conditions most happily have changed for the better," since he had proposed the measure last September to the Legal Education Advisory Committee.

Coleman's original recommendation was made shortly after the justice department had asked for investigations in alleged civil rights violations during the 1955 Democratic primaries.

"Since that time, however, the U. S. Department of Justice declined to intervene in a case the occurrence of which we deeply regret, but which simply presented no ground for federal interference," he added.

This was an obvious reference to the Emmett Till murder case which the FBI had refuse to investigate after a state trial jury acquitted two white men of the slaying of the 14-year-old Negro youth.

The Right Of Dissent

"Liberals" Censured Sen. Eastland For Views Differing From Their Own

BY DAVID LAWRENCE

B'ham, Ala.

WASHINGTON

A NEW WAVE of hysteria has cropped up in the United States Senate giving further evidence of the intolerance of the so-called "liberal" of today. It's another case of trying to censure or punish a senator for his views because they do not conform to those of other senators.

Thus, when Sen. Eastland of Mississippi, Democrat, was in line to be chosen chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee, protests came from senators of the so-called "liberal" group. They insisted that he be deprived of the chairmanship. One senator significantly let it be known that he wasn't raising any question about the eligibility of the Mississippi senator to retain his seat. Was this a veiled warning that the time may come in the not-far-distant future when a senator may be removed from the Senate rolls because his views are unpalatable to a majority?

Eastland Had Criticized Segregation Decision

SEN. EASTLAND has fallen from grace in the eyes of his critics because he ventured to make some adverse comments about the Supreme Court in connection with its decision in the segregation cases. He might not have been elected chairman of the Judiciary Committee a few days ago except for the "seniority" system, whereby the senator with the ranking position, due to length of service, succeeds to the chairmanship of a committee if he desires it. One Eastern newspaper on the "liberal" side says editorially, with respect to Mr. Eastland, that he should have been disqualified from getting the chairmanship because "he is therefore placed in a position of power over appointments to the federal courts." The same newspaper in the past has been in the forefront of those championing "the right of dissent."

The argument that Mr. Eastland, as chairman of the committee, has unique power over federal appointments is a specious one. For every member of the Senate has equal power to vote for or against the judicial appointees of the President, and the chairman of the Judiciary Committee has only one vote.

It's regrettable that, during the debate in the Senate, nobody reminded the senators that a man who actually had the power to make judicial appointments in the first instance — the late President Franklin D. Roosevelt — issued criticisms about the Supreme Court and went so far as to urge the "packing" of the high court with justices agreeable with his point of view. Would the "liberal" senators now favor "packing" the chairmanship in the Senate with senators who had preconceived views on every subject, and is the test to be a senator's views rather than his length of service?

Mr. Eastland said about the Supreme Court that it had been "indoctrinated and brainwashed by left-wing pressure groups." But the right to criticize the Supreme Court is a privilege utilized even by the great Abraham Lincoln, who, after the Supreme Court's decision in the Dred Scott case, said it was "erroneous" and that the new Republican Party would "do what we can to have it overruled." FDR's comments on the Supreme Court on March 9, 1937, were as caustic as any ever made. He said:

"The court in addition to the proper use of its judicial functions has improperly set itself up as a third house of the Congress—a super legislature, as one of the justices has called it—reading into the Constitution words and implications which are not there, and which were never intended to be there.

"We have, therefore, reached the point as a nation where we must take action to save the Constitution from the court and the court from itself. . . .

"Our difficulty with the court today rises not from the court as an institution but from human beings within it."

'Liberals' View Court As Political

THE "COURT PACKING" scheme was defeated but FDR did have the chance to appoint men to the Supreme Court whose views corresponded to his own. He achieved his "court packing" goal when a number of vacancies occurred that opened up the way to new appointments. Many of the "liberals" who didn't favor the idea of enlarging the court to 15 judges by passage of a law agreed nevertheless with the Roosevelt criticism of the Supreme Court.

To this day the "liberal" writers, especially in books and articles about the Supreme Court, have adopted the view that the Constitution is what the justices wish to make it—based on the political or economic predilections of a majority of the justices. The "liberal" view of today is that there is no need for construing the Constitution in accordance with precedent or historic principles of jurisprudence.

The Southerners who are critical of the Supreme Court's decision in the segregation case, notably Sen. Eastland, can hardly be blamed now for adopting the viewpoint of the so-called "liberals" in criticizing Supreme Court decisions as political or legislative and as having been influenced by "pressure groups."—©

Miss. boycott victim lent $5,000 by N.Y. trade union

Afro-American Sat. 2-25-56 p.19

Baltimore, Md.

NEW YORK — A Clarksdale, Miss. victim of a White Citizens Council "economic boycott" has been loaned $5,000 by a local trade union so that he can save his business.

The victim, R. D. Drew, made a $3,000 loan several months ago from a Clarksdale bank — payable in three years.

Immediate payment or foreclosure was demanded, however, when it was learned that Drew had signed a petition for integrated schools in Clarksdale.

DREW IS an undertaker and president of the Clarksdale NAACP chapter.

The loan was arranged by Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss. with Retail Drug Employees Union, local 1199, who mailed the check last week.

Amendment of the loan was made at the union's annual Negro History Week celebration by Leon J. Davis, local president, and Dr. Howard who was the guest speaker.

DR. HOWARD described Senator Eastland of Mississippi and the Citizens Council as "the greatest menace in this country today."

He and Mr. Davis noted that "the loan will not solve the problem of the thousands of colored persons affected" by the boycott, but "hopes it will start a similar chain reaction."

Both Groups Looking to State Government for Assistance

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., March 10—Like the moaning heaver of 16 tons, Mississippi's counties and municipalities are getting deeper in debt—bonded, that is.

The first recapitulation of the bonded debt of those political subdivisions in 16 years showed total outstanding obligations of $195,373,722 as of June 30, 1955. That's $89,493,212 more than shown in the compilation as of June 30, 1939 of $105,880,510.

Gasoline Obligations

Meanwhile, the parent governmental agency, the state of Mississippi, has no outstanding full faith and credit bonds. However, there are outstanding in gasoline revenue obligations, for which the gasoline tax is pledged to retire, $70,000,000.

A breakdown of the local bonded debt showed:

Municipal general bonds, $89,801,825, municipal separate school district obligations, $42,596,591; county road and school issues, $31,758,521, and countywide general obligations, $31,216,785.

On the basis of the assessed valuation of the 82 counties and 265 incorporated municipalities, the bonded debt per $100 valuation figures $16.40.

Five of the counties were bonded-debt free insofar as countywide obligations are concerned. They are Lamar, Panola, Rankin, Walthall and Yalobusha. Three others had no district road and school issues outstanding — Issaquena, Jefferson and Warren.

Seventy-three of the municipalities, mostly the smaller subdivisions, reported no bonded indebtedness.

MISSISSIPPI

Largest in size and bonded debt is Hinds County, seat of the state government at Jackson. It showed $34,563,500, of which $29,620,500 are chargeable to the city of Jackson. Smallest is Jefferson County, with only $93,000.

Some of the leading municipalities in outstanding bonds included:

Greenville, $9,042,000; Meridian, $8,035,000; Gulfport, $7,854,000; Natchez, $5,483,882; Clarksdale, $5,469,500; ;Yazoo City, $3,245,500; Corinth, $2,452,100; Hattiesburg, $2,738,000; Tupelo, $2,713,500; Greenwood, $2,553,000; Brookhaven, $2,353,500; Columbus, $2,298,000; McComb, $2,019,900; Indianola, $2,241,000, and Vicksburg, $2,173,300.

Meanwhile, with a total bonded debt of $132,398,416 hanging over the heads of the municipal taxpayers, those political subdivisions continue to be the "stepchild" of state government. For years, with little success, they have been trying to get part of the estimated $30,000,000 returned to the counties by the state — but with little success.

Cities' Share

At present, the municipalities are given $1,500,000 annually by the state, and that just since 1954. They get none of the estimated $15,000,000 returned annually to the counties out of the state gasoline tax, yet almost 90 per cent is paid by city motorists whose streets get none of it returned for maintenance or new construction.

And despite that the mileage being supported by the counties is gradually shrinking as the state takes over more and more, there is no change made in the old formula under which they get 2½ cents to the 7 cents gasoline excise tax.

The municipalities are before the current biennial session of the legislature asking for some form of permanent state aid. Thus far they have made little headway, despite that nearly half the state's two million population reside in urban areas.

Mississippi's legislature continues rural-minded. That is further shown in the tax exemptions allowed farmer co-ops as well as most of the articles purchased for agricultural purposes.

Farmers are refunded all except one cent of the state gasoline tax for non-highway use, yet the cities are unable to get the same concession on gasoline used in publicly owned motor vehicles.

The Mississippi Municipal Association, headed by Mayor W. J. Caraway of Leland, is asking for slightly in excess of $1,000,000 out of fire insurance premium taxes. Since the state's budget is tightly balanced at 183 million dollars, and already unbalanced to the tune of five million dollars in tentative approval of unbudgeted items, the city-fathers are having rough sledding.

Maintain Departments

Basis of the request for the fire insurance taxes is the fact that the municipalities alone maintain fire departments. The counties have no such operation, yet the city machines go beyond there corporate limits to aid those in rural areas.

Mr. Faulkner's ancestors owned slaves. My ancestors were slaves. He advises: "Stop now for a moment." For how long a moment? The Negro, the Northerner, the Southerner such as Mr. Faulkner, and the world at large have been patiently waiting a "moment" which has now lasted more than 90 years.

LESLIE H. ENGRAM

Sirs:

Since LIFE printed my "Letter to the North" I have received many replies from outside the South. Many of them criticized the reasoning in the letter, but so far none of them seem to have divined the reason behind the letter, the reason behind the urgency for the widest possible circulation of it, in time; which lends weight to a statement in the letter to the effect that the United States outside the South does not understand the South.

The reason behind the letter was the attempt of an individual to save the South and the whole United States too from the blot of Miss Autherine Lucy's death. She had just been suspended by the University of Alabama; a day had been set when a judge would pass on the validity of the suspension. I believed that when the judge abrogated the suspension, which he would have to do, the forces supporting her attempt to enter the university as a student would send her back to it. I believed that if they did so, she would possibly lose her life.

She was not sent back, so the letter was not needed for that purpose. I hope it will never be. But if a similar situation bearing the seed of a similar tragedy should arise again, maybe the letter will help to serve.

South Miss. Counties Plan Suit In Fight for Reapportionment

Journal Constitution p. 7-E
Atlanta, Ga. Sun. 4-8-56

Legal Battle Against Gerrymander To Follow Lines of Tennessee Action

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., April 7—An 1890 "gerrymander" of Mississippi's legislative representation, which has enabled the favored counties to defeat reapportionment efforts, is headed for the courts.

The legal attack is planned by south Mississippi counties which suffer from the under-representation based on the—existent "three grand divisions" of the state without any relationship to population.

Numerous legislative approaches to reapportionment have been defeated by the northeast counties favored under the present distribution of the 140 seats in the House of Representatives.

That same fate was met at the 1956 biennial assembly, just adjourned. Bills seeking reapportionment on the basis of population were offered and as usual, rejected. The same treatment was given proposals for a convention for legislative reapportionment as well as the updating of the asserted antiquated constitution dating to the "horse-and-buggy" days.

'Last Resort' Move

A Tennessee chancery court decision last November ordering a new reapportionment on grounds the Legislature of that state had illegally failed to redistribute the legislative seats every 10 years gave the south Mississippians the idea for that approach. That was the "last resort" move planned in event the Legislature failed to right the asserted wrong.

Failing in his legislative efforts, Rep. Upton Sisson of Harrison-Jackson Counties on the Gulf Coast, has announced plans to file suit.

The south Mississippian hopes to enlist a battery of constitutional lawyers to gain reapportionment on the basis of population. Incidentally, his home Harrison County has a population of around 80,000, a voting strength of 15,000, and one and one-half votes in the House of Representatives.

The Harrison-Jackson County seat is swapped every four years between those two counties.

That representation compares to the three seats held by Noxubee County in the northeastern sector, with a population of 22,000 and a voting registration of 2,500.

Harrison County is about 85 per cent white, while Noxubee is only 35 per cent white.

Other heavily populated Negro counties, outside the mostly white southern section, likewise have the same large representation.

Rep. Sisson argued with the prosegregationists that reapportionment would safeguard the all-white membership of the Legislature in event the Negro vote becomes a threat. Even that failed to gain him sufficient strength to get his proposals out of committee.

Rep. Sisson plans to enjoin every Democratic and Republican executive committee and election committees in the 82 counties from holding future legislative elections under the present apportionment. The injunction would be filed in the Hinds County Chancery Court at Jackson and would list the attorney general as a defendant.

The county election committees are named by the governor, attorney general and secretary of state.

Three stipulations are planned as the basis of the legal action:

1. That the present system is a gerrymandering of representation in violation of the Federal Guarantee of a republican form of government. Mr. Sisson hopes ultimately to get the issue before the United States Supreme Court on that contention.

2. That the present legislature is a de facto body and there can be no more legal elections until there is a reapportionment.

3. The counties which are presently under-represented cannot be required to pay taxes to the state treasury because it is taxation without representation.

In the Tennessee case, which is before the Supreme Court of that state, the chancery court ordered that either a new apportionment act would have to be passed or legislators could not be legally elected in 1956.

Rep. Sisson said if the Mississippi courts uphold his contentions, "the legislature could not do anything but come back in 1958 and reapportion prior to the legislative elections in 1959 or there won't be any legislature."

Six of Mississippi's nine Supreme Court justices are from the central and southern sectors and the other three from north Mississippi. Counties of four of the former justices would gain by a new apportionment on a population basis; two would lose. All three of the northern members' counties would lose, although one of them has written a book stressing the need for a convention to modernize the constitution of 1890.

Gives His Interpretation

When the 1890 apportionment was set out, 133 House members were prescribed. Since that time, new counties have been created mostly in south Mississippi and to care for them the legislature in 1904 provided the newly constituted political subdivisions would be given at least one seat in the legislature "until the next succeeding apportionment."

Rep. Sisson argues that it was intended that at each decennial census, a new look was planned of the legislative apportionment and changes accordingly made. He bases that on a section of the Constitution which states: "The legislature may, at the first session after the federal census of 1900, and decennially thereafter, make a new apportionment of senators and representatives."

Name Calling Has No Place In Explosive Racial Issue

Just a word of caution: The South, and especially Mississippi will face a most trying period this next 10 to 15 years—maybe longer. The ruling of the Supreme Court of the United States on segregation of the races brings us bang up against questions that must be worked out.

Some are constituting themselves our spokesmen and our leaders. We are listening to what they have to say—listening carefully. If they speak with self control and with good judgment, we shall hear them with respect. If they harangue us, obviously trying to arouse our hates and our prejudices, we shall turn a deaf ear and turn elsewhere for our leadership.

In the meantime, we ourselves promise not to call every man who disagrees with us a "Red, a Communist symphathizer."

We think there is a tendency to label any opinion that does not jibe with our own as a "dangerous" opinion. We shall be careful of applying names to our neighbors, who may not hold the same outlook on public questions that we hold.

We implore our readers to cultivate an ability to listen carefully to honest men, holding an honest opinion on any subject. When we do less we are not worthy of that great name we have adopted—an American.

We are especially watchful of political leaders who tell us in one breath that they will not tolerate integration in any walk of life and then urge us to vote for a presidential party nominee who stands for exactly the opposite.

We cannot but suspect that ambition in a private career rather than the public good prompts such action.

We shall watch for consistency in the utterances of those, our leaders, who, it seems to us are talking out of both sides of their mouth at the same time.

As far as we are concerned, the utterances of public aspirants for office will be judged on their merits and not on party inspiration. We'll be our own judge of whether they are speaking with sincerity and the best interest of all of us.

So much for what so-called leaders say and do.

Teachers' Resignations Termed 'Good Riddance'

Memphis Press-Scimitar 2-11-56

By SAM JOHNSON

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 10 (AP)—The Mississippi House of Representtaives said Friday the resignation of two college professors over the "Kershaw incident" was good riddance and praised college officials who quickly accepted the resignations.

One representative called the two professors "moral derelicts." He labeled one a "filthy character."

The House praised Chancellor J. D. Williams of the University of Mississippi and President Ben Hilbun of Mississippi State College for their action "to safeguard our culture and traditions from vicious attacks. . . ."

The House said: "Our state-supported institutions of higher learning should reflect the thinking of our people and . . . should be the primary exponent and protection of our culture and traditions. . ."

Sociology Head Resigns

Dr. Morton King Jr., head of the University of Mississippi sociology department, resigned early this week because, he said, the university is no longer willing to defend freedom of speech, thought or inquiry.

Dr. Willi maBuchanan, assistant professor of government at Mississippi State College, resigned yesterday in a five-point protest.

Both resignations involved the refusal of the University of Mississippi to permit the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio, to speak on the campus.

The Episcopal minister advocates racial integration and is a member of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People. He was scheduled to speak during Religious Emphasis Week Feb. 21-22 until he disclosed his NAACP membership.

Invitation Cancelled

Chancellor Williams cancelled the invitation.

Dr. King said the "Kershaw incident" was the straw that broke the camel's back.

Dr. Buchanan also said the Kershaw incident showed freedom of speech and thought is ebbing in Mississippi's university and colleges.

The House of Representatives, in a resolution passed over the protest of Chancellor Williams, replied:

". . .There have been attempts by misguided reformers from both within and without . . . wilfully or unintentionally to teach ideologies contrary to and undermining the traditions and culture of the South."

The House asked officials of state colleges to use "every effort . . . to prevent subversive influences from infiltrating into our institutions."

2,500 petition Senate to investigate Mississippi

Afro-American Sat. 2-11-56 P.1

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON

Bishop Edgar A. Love of Baltimore, last Friday urged the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights to hold hearings in Mississippi at the earliest possible date.

Serving as spokesman for a delegation of 20 persons from nine southern states, the Methodist bishop called upon Senator William Langer, a member of the subcommittee, to go to Mississippi to investigate the "infringments upon Federal rights of colored citizens."

Mrs. Wilma S. Alexander of Richmond presented a petition to the senator, signed by some 2,500 persons from all 48 states, asking that the committee conduct an investigation "into the tragic denials of constitutional rights now taking place in the State of Mississippi."

IN A PRELIMINARY statement, Bishop Love said "in the State of Mississippi a dominant faction is. . . flouting the authority of the Supreme Court, perverting state institutions of justice, condoning the murder of colored citizens who attempt to exercise their civil rights and driving fair-minded white citizens into frightened silence by economic boycott or the menace of physical violence."

The bishop pointed out that the problem which confronts the colored citizens of that state "is not a simple continuation of past abuses, it is an insurrection against the Constitution and laws of the United States."

"THOUSANDS of white Mississippians desire justice and fair treatment for the victims of this oppression," continued Bishop Love, "but these white citizens are condemned to silence."

They are silenced "by the same lawless forces that have turned the whole apparatus of state government against the colored people."

MISSISSIPPI

Governor Coleman And The Mississippi Negro

Holiscote. P. 4

Jackson, Miss

We feel certain that we are joined by the vast majority of the intelligent and responsible Negro citizens of the state in complimenting incoming Governor J. P. Coleman for the admirable restraint with which he spoke regarding the emotionally-packed and highly explosive subjects of segregation, integration, and race-relations in Mississippi, in his inaugural address here Tuesday.

Sat. 1-21-56

There are still a large number of able and intelligent Negroes in Mississippi of leadership caliber, who have not yet lost their welcome in the councils of authority, who, realizing with the great statesmen, politicians and diplomats of all the ages that compromise is the key to progress, should be willing to take a stand for some compromise plan to reduce the tension and growing hatred and ill-will between the races in the state.

It should be easily discernable to any intelligent observer that the issue between the proponents of total integration and of total segregation have reached a point of ever widening diversion, and unyielding determination.

That the new Governor said in his inaugural address that he was ready to give sympathetic consideration to any problem concerning the Negro citizens of the state that deserves the attention of the state Government is a challenge that should be met by a well organized and well prepared group of intelligent and responsible Negro citizens, imbued with the idea that the concern and progress of the Negro concerns the progress of the entire state, a group to which the Editor and the Jackson Advocate is ready to give one-hundred percent support and cooperation.

Kershaw Incident Causes Ole Miss Educator To Quit

Courier-Journal

University, Miss., Feb. 7 (AP)—The head of the University of Mississippi sociology department today announced his resignation after the university withdrew an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw to speak on the campus.

Dr. Morton B. King, Jr., 42, said the Kershaw incident showed that the university officials and the college board no longer would defend "the freedom of thought, inquiry, and speech which are essential for higher education to flourish."

Mr. Kershaw's invitation was withdrawn because of his pro-integration views and his membership in the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People.

Won $32,000 In Quiz Show

The Oxford, Ohio, Episcopal minister, an expert on jazz music who won $32,000 on a television program by answering questions on that subject, was scheduled to speak February 21 and 22 during religious-emphasis week at the University.

The Rev. Joseph Fichter of Loyola University of the South at New Orleans reportedly withdrew from participation in the religious-emphasis program because of the Kershaw incident.

University Chancellor J. D. Williams withdrew Mr. Kershaw's invitation after learning he was an N.A.A.C.P. member. (Mr. Kershaw is a former Louisvillian.)

VOWS TO RETAIN SEGREGATION IN MISSISSIPPI

Daily Tribune Wed. 1-18-56 P. 8

But Without Violence, New Governor Says

Chicago, Ill.

Jackson, Miss., Jan. 17 (AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman told his state and the nation today that Mississippi will keep segregation without violence and despite the federal government.

In all history, "there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another." he said in his inaugural address.

"With all due respect to the mighty power of the United States government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done," the governor asserted.

Urges U. S. to Consider

He urged the rest of the nation to consider Mississippi's position before passing judgement: "We are entitled to the sympathetic understanding of our friends in the remainder of the country.

". . . The white people of Mississippi are not a race of Negro killers.

"We ask you to remember that by reason of the numbers involved, this problem is more acute here than in any other state in the nation.

"It is not something which can be viewed with complacency or ignored, and if you lived in Mississippi and knew the full situation, you would look upon it as we do."

45 Pct. of Population

Negroes form 45 per cent of Mississippi's population.

Coleman, who is 42, succeeded Gov. Hugh White. Coleman has served as district attorney, circuit court judge, Supreme court justice and attorney general.

He began life as a farm boy. In storybook form, he worked his way thru college in the depression days, leaving the University of Mississippi to become secretary to former Rep. A. L. Ford [D., Miss.].

He went to night law school in Washington and was graduated from George Washington university in 1937.

Predicts Retention

Coleman predicted to a joint session of the legislature on the Capitol steps that when he ends his term four years from now "the separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will still be in full force and effect in exactly the same manner and form as we know it today."

Without naming nullification specifically, Coleman urged Mississippi legislators to postpone any resolution nullifying —declaring void — federal court decisions outlawing segregation. He promised to deliver a special message to the legislature soon on the subject.

Amvet head calls for Dixie boycott

Tribune Fri. 2-3-56

NEW YORK — Mickey Levine, national chairman of the American Veterans committee, has urged that it is time to take "drastic action" against the growing lawlessness in the state of Mississippi.

Levine has set out a program of action, including a voluntary boycott against the products of Mississippi, a Committee for Political Refugees from Mississippi terror, and a "Radio Free Mississippi" to break through the "Magnolia Curtain" so the people of the state "may discover what the civilized people of America think."

The veterans' national chairman made his proposals in a message to the editors of Look magazine following publication of an article purporting to contain a confession by J. W. Milam and Roy Bryant to the slaying of Emmett Till. Milam and Bryant were acquitted in a trial in Sumner, Miss. in September.

Levine also set forth his views in a speech over the national network of the American Broadcasting System.

He said. "The veterans of this nation should be concerned about what is going on in Mississippi. We fought against lawlessness in the world. Now we have to face up to lawlessness at home."

Two Women Fired In Mississippi; Guilty Of Siging

Globe. P. 14 Sun. 2-19-56

CLARKSDALE, Miss., Feb. 9.—Two women who have been discharged from their jobs at the federally-aided local hospital here because they signed a school desegregation petition have sent affidavits describing their dismissal to the U. S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

This was announced today by Aaron E. Henry, president of the Coahama county NAACP branch.

The hospital concerned— the Coahama County Hospital — receives federal funds under the Hill-Burton

Nashville, Tenn.

NAACP affiliations also were cited as a cause for dismissal in the affidavits. One of the women belongs to the NAACP, as does the husband of the other woman.

Both affidavits state: "In my dismissal the hospital administrator, Mr. Reed Hogan, had me to know that there was nothing about my work that he was dissatisfied with. He told me that because of my activity with the NAACP (or — "my husband's activity with the NAACP") and definitely because I signed a petition asking that the the supreme law of the land be obeyed here in Clarksdale, Mississippi, that he must let me go. He said that pressure was brought to bear against him by the Hospital Board and the White Citizens Councils that left him no alternative."

The statements then go on to cite other racially discriminatory practices at the federally-aided hospital. Among these are less pay for Negro employees doing the same work as white employees, refusal to call Negro patients by courtesy titles, lack of staff and of quality and variety of food on the floor where Negro patients are housed.

Mississippi Governor Brands Nullification Legal Poppycock

Journal + Constitution Sun. 2-19-56 P. 3-F Atlanta, Ga.

11-Man Legislative Panel Named to Chart State's Course

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 18—Mississippi's course in "interposing" its sovereignty against enforcement of the integration decisions of the United States Supreme Court will be charted by a 11-member legislative committee.

There is one thing certain—the avenue will steer clear of any sort of "nullification" movement since Gov. J. P. Coleman says that is "legal poppycock" and void of enforcement, except by military force which he said is "out of the question."

"It's all right to interpose your strength and power in every legal way, but talk of nullification is about like ordering the Mississippi River to run upstream or turning the eagle atop the Capitol to face north," he said.

Gov. Coleman pointed out that Alabama and Georgia have adopted resolutions declaring the decisions "null and void," yet "look at what has happened in those states."

"The golf courses of Atlanta have been opened to Negroes, as has the University of Alabama," he said. "Declaring null and void doesn't change a thing—the federal courts are still sitting in those states."

Gov. Coleman believes that Mississippi has numerous legal ways in which to interpose itself between the desegregation mandates. Fact is, he said a 1954 law for assignment of pupils on the basis of health, welfare, morals and community welfare is one avenue of interposition.

Strategy Meeting

The governor was one of the four chief executives who met recently at Richmond, Va., to adopt a segregation-strategy course. He said they agreed on the overall approach, but that some of the states planned more drastic actions than others—all with the same objective to preserve the Southern way of life.

It was on Gov. Coleman's return from the Virginia meeting that the current biennial session of the Legislature authorized appointment of a joint House and Senate committee to draft the interposition course.

That group met this week for organizational purposes and named Sen. Earl Evans Jr., of Canton, the president pro tem of the Senate, chairman, and Rep. George Payne Cossar of Tallahatchie County, vice chairman.

A subcommittee was delegated to draft the resolution of interposition. On it are Lieut. Gov. Carroll Gartin of Laurel, House Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, Sen. Hayden Campbell of Jackson and Rep. Thompson McClellan of Clay County.

Speaker Sillers said since Gov. Coleman "is the leader of our efforts to preserve segregation, we plan to confer with him."

"We just want to see if he is going along with us, or we're going along with him, which of course we will," he said.

In view of the governor's position on "nullification," Speaker Sillers explained that Mississippi will propose an "interposition resolution."

After the wording has been formulated and the whole committee agrees on the draft, Gov. Coleman is to go before the Legislature and speak for its adoption.

Legal Bypasses

Meanwhile, added legal bypasses to the integration decisions of the Supreme Court have been authorized by the Legislature. A series of bills designed to strengthen Mississippi's hold on segregation have been passed, almost unanimously.

Gov. Coleman looks on the bills, some of which he proposed, as interposition steps. At least, they are designed to present legal obstacles, which it may take years to clear, to any integration movements.

The bills were passed despite absence of any movement in Mississippi looking to integration in the public schools, senior colleges or public parks. Some of their opponents felt that the whites were "agitating" the situation, rather than the Negroes.

Some of the new bills presenting legal delays approved at the current legislative session are:

Prohibit out-of-state lawyers from "fomenting or agitating" lawsuits, and make it unlawful for anyone to solicit funds or donate money for the filing or prosecution of lawsuits.

Permit any public business, profession or trade to select its clientele and those it will serve, and subjecting those refusing to vacate such a place when asked to do so to prosecution as a trespasser.

Making it unlawful to create a disturbance or breach of the peace in any public place or business.

Safeguards the rights of Mississippians from interference by federal agents when they are acting in conformity with state laws or the state constitution.

One senator complained that the FBI had been in his Bolivar County at least four times investigating charges he said were filed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

SENATOR LEVELS BOYCOTT BLAST

New Orleans La.

Move in Miss. Is 'Unwise,' Says Alexander

Wed. 3-21-56

(The Times-Picayune Capital Bureau)

JACKSON, Miss., March 20—Boycotts of certain products in Mississippi growing out of the segregation issue were condemned Tuesday by a state senator as "manifestly unwise" and a threat to industrialization of the state.

P. 4

Sen. W. B. Alexander, Boyle, said on the Senate floor that some Mississippians have "lifted the banners of bitterness and prejudice above our feeling of common sense" against companies which he said have long been friendly to the South.

In recent months boycotts of varying degree have been reportedly directed at Falstaff beer, Phillip Morris cigarettes, the Ford Motor Company and several other products in Mississippi.

Literature Is Cited

All the reported reprisals have been traceable to literature distributed in Mississippi which charged that the companies gave financial support to organizations which actively opposed racial segregation.

Alexander charged that the literature was being "pushed and pedalled by an admitted ex-Communist from St. Louis."

Copies of a publication—called the White Sentinel, which is published in St. Louis, carrying articles involving the companies on the segregation issue have been widely distributed in the state.

Without mentioning Ford by name, Alexander said that the company has been "the victim of an attempted boycott, because a foundation bearing its name . . . made a contribution to the NAACP."

The senator said that the motor company "has no more control over the foundation than I have." He added that the company has plants throughout the South which employ Southern labor, which it "could be tempted to remove . . . if this is the reception they are to receive."

Alexander, referring to Philip Morris cigarettes, said that "we owe an apology to the company, whose facilities are solely and entirely in the South . . . and which buys all of its products in the South."

(Falstaff several months ago issued a public letter charging that it had not contributed as a company to buy a membership in the NAACP as alleged in the "White Sentinel.")

Mississippi, he said, could stand to lose more than the rest of the nation in attempting economic reprisals against national companies.

"We cannot afford boycotts," he declared, "we have the problem with us of sustaining and augmenting the tremendous advances we have achieved in the postwar period."

Thousands Spent

Boycotts, Alexander added, "have been historically a prime weapon of the Communist party and are un-American in nature, in that they deny and are contrary to the first principles for which we have been fighting."

He said that on one hand Mississippi has spent thousands of dollars "to solicit industry to relocate in Mississippi or start new factories here," while at the same time "a small group are being duped into calling boycotts against large corporations."

Alexander intimated that he did not consider the White Citizens' Councils responsible for the boycotts. He said he is a legal advisor to the Citizens' Council group in Bolivar county.

"We shall win this fight if we adopt the principles of moderation," he asserted.

LAWFUL FIGHT SOUGHT

P. 21 Memphis

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., March 20.—A Mississippi Delta senator urged his colleagues Tuesday to fight segregation "not on a racial basis but upon a basis of common sense and reason."

Senator W. B. Alexander of Cleveland counseled his fellow senators: "Let us follow the example of our Citizens Council in staying strictly within the law in the fight which lies ahead."

Warms Of Boycotts

Senator Alexander warned against economic boycotts against corporations and companies in other sections of the nation saying, "A motor company has been the victim of an attempted boycott, because a foundation bearing its name — which was established decades ago by the founder of the motor company — made a contribution to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

"I am advised that this motor company has no more control over the foundation than I have. This motor company has plants throughout the South employing Southern labor, particularly in Dallas and Memphis making automobiles for Southern people and could well be tempted to remove its plants, if this is the reception they receive."

Senator Alexander said such a boycott is unfair to the dealers for this company scattered all over the South.

Cites Other Incident

He said a cigaret company also has been subjected to an economic boycott on what he called the erroneous belief that it contributed to the NAACP.

Senator Alexander said, "We shall never permit the amalgamation of the races and the destruction of the virtues of both races at the behest of a power-mad minority in this country . . . We shall grit our teeth and keep our temper. We shall make no intemperate public utterance. We shall introduce no foolish and unwise legislation. We shall fight this fight on a constitutional basis."

The senator made the speech on the floor in advocating a temperate and nonracial approach to what he called Federal encroachment.

This way, he said, "We shall thus enlist the help of the states of the North because the preservation of the Constitution is just as much to their interest as it is ours."

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 10.—Three more ministers scheduled to appear on the Religious Emphasis Week program at the University of Mississippi Feb. 20-22 have decided not to participate after the cancellation of the Rev. Alvin Kershaw's invitation.

Letters and wires of cancellation have been received from the Rev. George Chauncy, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church at Monticello, Ark.; the Rev. Joe Earl Elmore of New York, former director of Methodist student work at Ole Miss, and Rabbi Milton Grafman of Temple Emanuel at Birmingham.

Announced earlier this week was the withdrawal of the Rev. Joseph H. Fichter, professor of sociology at Loyola University, New Orleans.

The Committee of 100, student-faculty group in charge of the program, is scheduled to decide at its meeting Monday night whether to cancel the week's activities.

The Rev. Mr. Chauncy in a letter to the Committee of 100 said he was withdrawing on the ground "the revocation of Mr. Kershaw's invitation appears unjust because it implies that his stand against racial segregation disqualifies him as a suitable religious leader."

Anti-Segregation Lawyer Planned

Post-Herald Birm. 5-3-56

JACKSON, Miss., May 2 (U.P.)—Mississippi may hire a full-time attorney to plot state strategy in maintaining racial segregation if the plan meets with final approval May 15.

Birm. Ala.

The State Sovereignty Commission voted in an organizational meeting today to hear recommendations on the proposal at its next session two weeks away.

P. 15

Under the plan the appointed attorney would work closely with the attorney general and would be prepared to take "full responsibility" for defending segregation in the courts.

The action followed an announcement by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that suit for integration of the races in public schools would be filed soon in Mississippi.

JACKSON, Miss., May 15 (AP)—Mississippi's State Sovereignty Commission, watchdog of states' rights, today voted to hire secret agents to serve as "eyes and ears" in the fight to keep segregation.

P. 11

Along the same lines, the 12-member commission voted to spend state money to "buy information" about activities in the integration camp.

In another move, the commission hired a full-time publicity director to explain to integrationists Mississippi's position concerning segregation.

The action was part of what Gov. J. P. Coleman, commission chairman, labeled an attempt "to bring this commission into its full effect and fruition."

The commission was set up by the 1956 Legislature to prevent federal "encroachment" upon states' rights with the segregation question as the main objective.

In debating the issue of hiring undercover agents, the commission agreed upon secrecy because, among other reasons "it's possible we may want to hire a Negro" to spy upon Negro activities within Mississippi.

Coleman called attention to the FBI's use of informants and said the SSC would operate in the same manner. He called the investigators and informants, known but to the commission, "an official arm of state government."

The governor cautioned the commission not to panic. "I see no reason for alarm, frustration or futility," he said. "We have the ball and it's up to the opposition to take the initiative."

"After all, integration came about because the people gave up. We will not give up."

Mississippi Still Poorest State

Herald 5-18

By NIXON SMILEY

Herald Staff Writer

JACKSON, Miss. — Despite her comeback from the depths of poverty and despair, Mississippi is still the poorest state in the union when measured by statistics.

SMILEY

The average per capita income for 1954, the last figures available, was $873, compared with the national average of $1,770. Georgia's average per capita income of $1,237 in 1954 was a third again as great as that of Mississippi, and Georgia long has been a yardstick for measuring poorness.

But back in the depths of despair and depression, Mississippi's income dropped to $131 a year per person. That represented earnings of about 35 cents a day per person.

Miami Fla.

Mississippians had enough to eat to keep them alive, but not enough to hold their heads very high.

Tues. 5-15-56

It was in the midst of depression, however, that Mississippi began building a foundation for a comeback. For it was in the 1930's that Mississippi farmers first learned about the science of farming, of such things as soil conservation, livestock improvement, hybrid corn and the like.

And it was in the 1930's that Mississippi's leaders — a few of them — began to realize that agriculture wasn't enough to keep Mississippi going; that she needed industry, too.

It was in those days that the ground was prepared for the South's retreat from romanticism and the philosophy of agrarianism — the idea that agriculture should be the basis of Southern life and that industry was a mean pursuit not worthy of a gentleman.

In the 1930's close to 40 per cent of Mississippi's population of 2,000,000 were Negroes. Many of them could neither read nor write. Mississippi had the highest illiteracy rate in the United States.

It began to dawn on a few people that if the state was to progress her Negroes also must progress. Some attempt was made to improve Negro schools. But in those days Mississippi could do very little for white students, and the whites came first.

Even as recent as 1950 there were 9,500 white teachers for 267,000 white students, compared with 6,500 Negro teachers for 268,000 Negro students. And the white teacher received twice the pay of the Negro teacher.

Since then Mississippi has set up an educational plan with an aim to equalize the opportunities of white and Negro students. Salaries are now the same for teachers of like rating in both races.

The state is in the midst of a school building program that is expected to cost 110 million dollars.

"The Negroes soon will have much better school facilities in Mississippi than the whites," said an official in Jackson. "It can't be helped. We're building more new Negro schools than new white schools.

"We're getting some criticism, too, from white people who have to send their children to schools built several years ago, while the Negro students go to modern, new schools. As the school program progresses it's going to take some effort to convince a lot of white people that the Negro isn't getting preferred treatment in Mississippi."

Are the Negroes taking advantage of their new opportunities?

"Yes," said a strong pro-segregationist. "I'll have to admit that the Negro has made tremendous progress, although I still doubt that the average Negro has much capacity for education.

"You just can't tell, though. We used to say the same thing about the poor whites. We thought that they were genetically inferior, or something. But we've found out that the poor whites can learn as well as the rich whites. There's a whole lot we don't know about people."

My informant added that he thought mechanized farming had done more for the Negro in the South than anything else.

"It has forced him off the land as a tenant and field hand," he said. "Farmers don't need a lot of Negroes around any more. They can do the work with machinery that it would take a dozen Negroes to do.

"The Negroes, and the poor whites, too, have been forced to leave the farm in large numbers. And where they do stay on the farm — for large farms do require extra help — they are treated much better than they used to be.

"Maybe those that go to the cities do live in slums. So what? The city slums are an improvement over the shanty slums of the country. But every Southern city is conscious of its slums. We'll tear them down and replace them with apartment houses one of these days."

Mississippi Would Hire Negro "Informer"

Herald 5-16 Miami Fla.

JACKSON, Miss. - (ANP) - The Mississippi State Sovereignty Commission has announced plans to hire secret agents--including a Negro--to check on activities of anti-segregationists within the state.

Tues. 5-22-56

The 12 member commission, set up by the 1956 Legislature as a watchdog of states rights, announced also that it will spend state money to "buy information" about activities in the integration camp.

In debating the issue of hiring undercover agents, the commission agreed upon secrecy because, among other things, "it's possible we may want to hire a Negro" to spy upon Negro activities in Miss

'Cloak and Dagger' Tactics

Mississippi May Hire Negro Spies!

Courier P. 3 Sat. 5-26-56

Pittsburgh, Pa

JACKSON, Miss.—A genuine and official threat to use "cloak and dagger" tactics against integrationist forces in Mississippi has been hurled by the State Sovereignty Commission, and it's no "dark secret" that the hiring of a "Negro spy" is a strong possibility.

The Commission's Chairman, Governor J. P. Coleman, revealed that the pro-segregationists have made a careful study of the Federal Bureau of Investigation's use of "informants" and announced that the state of Mississippi is planning to operate in an identical fashion.

A mantle of secrecy was draped over the Commission meeting on the subject because, as one spokesman revealed, "it's possible we may want to hire a Negro" to spy upon the activities of Mississippi's Negro population.

The Commission did not make it clear how the "Negro spy" would go about his job of keeping an eye on the state's one million, or more, Negroes. However, Governor Coleman did say that the "secret agent" would be considered "an official arm of state government."

Also, Mississippi officials indicated that they are willing to pay state money to buy information on Negro activities.

WHETHER the "spy" will be a "black Mata Hari" or a "tan X-9" is not known because Coleman and his boys aren't talking.

However, the "spy" proposition must have bolstered the segregationist's confidence because after the session, Coleman announced, "I see no reason for alarm, frustration or futility. We have the ball and it's up to the opposition to take the initiative. After all integration came up because the people gave up. We will not give up."

Mass. House asks Miss. investigation

Afro-American P. 3 Sat. 5-19-56

BOSTON — The Massachusetts House of Representatives last week passed joint resolutions calling upon Attorney General Herbert Brownell to conduct investigations in Mississippi.

Resolutions adopted asked that Brownell order the Justice Department to probe civil rights violations and breakdown of law enforcement in that state.

Rep. Leo Santag, Roxbury Democrat and sponsor of House Bill 257, led the successful bid to get the resolutions passed after they had been defeated previously by a 65-27 standing vote.

LEADING THE opposition was Rep. Gardner E. Campbell of Wakefield. The Republican declared:

"Every state in the Union has the right to home rule. It is time we started attending to our own business and stopped butting into other people's affairs."

The Roxbury representative countered:

"What happens in Mississippi is the business of every right thinking American" as he cited excerpts from the Till murder trial and events leading to the slaying adding:

"My resolutions express the shock and horror and moral indignation of the cities of the Commonwealth. What has happed in Mississippi reflects on each one of us in the United States."

REP. EARLE S. TYLER of Watertown, Republican floor leader, led the opposition in defeating the resolution on the first day.

Some 108 Democrats and 24 Republicans voted in favor of the resolutions while 76 Republicans and 10 Democrats voted against it.

Among those voting in opposition were Rep. Irene K. Thresher of Newton, vice chairman of the Republican State Committee.

REP. CHARLES GIBONS of Stoneham, Republican floor leader and candidate for Leiutenant Governor, voting in opposition on the standing vote, but left the chamber during the roll call.

The joint resolution will now go before the senate for concurrence of adoption.

There'll be no color line on telephone party line in Miss.

Atlanta Journal Sat. 1-28-56

JACKSON, Miss. — "It's news to me. No complaints have come to my attention about party telephone lines being integrated," the Southern Bell manager said. "We've got no way of knowing what a customer's race is. A customer to us is just a customer, colored or white. We are a public utility."

This was the way E. K. Lumpkin, of the Bell Telephone Company's 12-county Central Mississippi District, shrugged off the request of Mississippi Public Service Commissioner Norman A. Johnson that the company segregate party telephone lines.

Johnson had announced that he would ask that colored and white telephone users be put on different telephone lines to "avoid a big confusion." He said he had received complaints from white subscribers.

Mississippi Has Some Moderates, Too

Post & Times Herald P.3

By Richard L. Coe

Staff Reporter

Recently a guest lecturer at the University of Mississippi, drama editor Coe gleaned incidental intelligence about the state in a week of talk and travel.

Sun. 5-6-56

THERE'S A MIDDLE ground of moderates in Mississippi which is not making the headlines.

Washington D.C.

As weary of reporters asking them pros and cons of integration as they are of the Grace Kelly wedding, middle-of-the-road Mississippians regret the extremes of opinion being reported from their state.

This group feels it is not represented by the extremes staked out by either Sen. Eastland or the NAACP. From the liberal minded Delta Democrat-Times of Greenville to the conservative bank president of booming Natchez, the visitor can find many who think that integration is inevitable, that the wisest procedure is to admit it quietly. They regret the rantings of Northern liberals or their own Citizens' Councils alike.

Mississippians would rather talk of the vast gains in the past 20 years around the state, believe this has been totally ignored by out-of-state reporters.

DIRT ROADS were everywhere in the '30s. Now there's a complete network of hard-topped highways between the smallest towns. They're proud of the big fertilizing plant built by Mississippi capital, plan a second. New schools and hospitals are everywhere evident to the most casual traveler. "We still may be near the bottom of the 48 states," says a longtime resident, 'but you should have seen us 20 years ago."

Biggest advance of all is electricity. Electric wires lead to the meanest plantation cabins, over which towers many a TV antenna, before which is parked many a two-toned car.

As everywhere, there are cockeyed contradictions. Officially, it's a dry state, but one merry Daughter of the Confederacy admits that "we're really wringing wet." To catch the wets, there's a 10 per cent tax on the black market, which mainly means liquor. This isn't collected directly by the state. Instead, it employs a private collection firm, to which it agrees to give 10 per cent of its 10 per cent.

Fortyish Lawrence Adams has been in the State Senate 15 years with the sole aim of changing the liquor laws. This spring, for the first time, dry forces conceded that prohibition's a bust, came out for local option, to be voted on in a few months.

Another cozy example of legal loopholes is the parking meters around Oxford's courthouse square. These call for a penny an hour but, if paid within 24 hours, the fine for a parking ticket is only 10 cents. So, it's cheaper to deposit nothing, pay the fine whenever you're caught.

OXFORD'S most famous citizen is Novelist-Nobel Prize Winner William Faulkner, who added that "u" to the family name. He's been visiting his daughter in Charlottesville, Va., awaiting the birth of her first child. Oxonians view him as either a great man or an eccentric, but they're proud that the postcard view of his house is a best-seller.

Faulkner's mother, Maud Falkner—without his "u"—is the Grandma Moses of the South. In her eighties and recovering from a near-fatal illness, she's a painter whose subjects range from flowers to the faces and cabins of the Negoes. Her style's not so primitive as the North's Grandma Moses' and she's proud to have buyers, sets her prices according to the size of the painting, the larger the higher.

There's an interesting experiment going on in Greenville, where the Hodding Carters' Delta Democrat-Times has just opened a radio station dedicated to better-than-country-average music and hourly local news flashes from the adjoining, trim city room. Carter is currently crossing the Atlantic on a 45-foot sailboat with four friends; while he's away, sans radio equipment, wife Betty tops the staff as efficiently as she did during World War II.

Nachez' famed house "Pilgrimage," just over, was its usual big success, the Legislature chipping in $10,000 to put it on TV's Wide, Wide World. So eager were the burghers to appear on TV that the script had to expand its original 65 characters way up into the hundreds. The annual "Pilgrimage" nets each of the 30 homes around $2000—for some families the year's major income.

BUT ALONG the Mississippi, trade and industry are booming. Westinghouse has a big new plant, others are building and modern style architecture dots the landscape.

Cattle-raising and timber are passing cotton as the state's top product.

The literary set glows with pleasure that Jackson's Eudora Welty seems to have a Broadway hit with "The Ponder Heart," that young novelist teacher Evans Harrington's "The Prisoners" has had national acclaim and that provocative David Cohn is soon to come out with a new book, dedicated to the University's "Dutch" and Jim Silver.

On the Oxford campus, the spirit of satire rides high with a mimeographed spoof called the Nigble Papers, wittily devoted to the notion that the state, dominantly Scotch-Irish, must do away with such "interlopers." A few Nigble excerpts:

"We of the South know, love and understand our Scotch-Irish nationals. We admire those few of them who have genuinely contributed to our fair land, W. C. Fields, to name one of a few. Yes, we know them, friends. We know and accept that the Scotch-Irish are to a man dirty, ignorant, drunk and musically inclined. We are prepared to handle them as we always have, with love and respect and an ever-present understanding of their own particular problems.

". . . The Scotch-Irish have only been in this country two hundred years. Before that they lived in the Highlands of Scotland totally without washing machines, electric lights, automobiles and all the other basic elements of civilization and dressed only in the rudest sort of kilts . . . Their music, as typified by such dances as the jig or highland fling, is characteristically lewd and shows the primitive rhythms of the Highlands from whence they came.

". . . Do you want your daughter to marry a windbag-playing, Highland-flinging, kilt-wearing creature?"

The student writers got a dressing down for their satire, but to the relief of Mississippi moderates, they weren't expelled.

Mississippi's Stand

Commercial Appeal Thu. 3-2-56

The Mississippi Legislature on Wednesday adopted the policy of interposition in its fight against the integration decisions of the Supreme Court. In neither House nor Senate was a single dissenting voice heard.

The Legislature took its stand on the ground that the Court's rulings against segregation of the races are "unconstitutional, invalid and of no lawful effect within the confines of the state." Further the Legislature declared that it will take "all appropriate measures honorably and constitutionally available to us to void this illegal encroachment upon our rights."

Memphis Tenn.

People in other sections of the country could make no more substantial error than to suppose the Mississippi Legislature meant merely to be obstructive and indulge in a delaying action. On the contrary, it has had resort to a process not without honorable precedent in our history when the people of a state or area were deeply stirred by the belief they were being put upon by unconstitutional and oppressive employment of powers by the central government.

P. 6

The policy of interposition means in effect that the people of a sovereign state feel that they have been subjected to dictatorial and unauthorized action by a branch of the Federal Government. In this case, the Supreme Court is in question, but the principle would be applicable, under adequate provocation, to the legislative or executive arms as well. It amounts to saying that interposition is a proper means of checking undue use of Federal influence on state affairs.

The interposition stand is sound also in that it calls emphatic attention of sister states to the position and feelings of one that believes it is being unjustly treated. It likewise puts other states on notice that they may also become subject to acts of the Federal Government to which they would strenuously object, and it indicates what the results would be. Finally, it invites other states to decide after becoming fully appraised of a situation whether the Constitution shall be amended.

What the Mississippi Legislature has done is to make every effort to see that all the people of the nation know the score, which amounts to a conviction that integration would damage its educational system, meantime disrupting the social order most gravely. Its act is calculated to bring into the light the real meaning of the opposition to integration and to show how seriously the South regards it.

Another fundamental matter involved is the request that Congress submit the question of state sovereignty in a proposal for an amendment to the Constitution that would spell out the school issue. An amendment saying the Supreme Court had the right to take the action it did would be the fair, orderly and acceptable way to determine the ultimate decision.

It is assumable, we believe, that an amendment of the sort mentioned would be defeated without difficulty, which is the more reason for making the Supreme Court rulings subject to test through legal, constitutional processes.

Mississippi feels the Court has encroached on the powers reserved to the several states and has, in effect, abrogated to itself the functions properly exercised only by state legislative bodies. Fairness demands proof of how widely that feeling prevails in the nation.

When this Republic was being organized, the founders, with great wisdom provided checks and balances including an amending process that requires approval of at least three-fourths of the sovereign states before the Constitution could be changed.

Obviously, the edicts of the Supreme Court could not get a three-fourths vote of sanction in this instance. Its actions, then, lend substance to the argument that it has circumvented the intent of the Founding Fathers that no state or group of states should be subjected to what they regarded as intolerable conditions unless it were found by the three-fourths rule that the imposition was held to be necessary in the interest of the welfare of the Republic.

It is not nullification or secession Mississippi has in mind, but a testing through legal methods of the definitions of power as between the sovereign states and the central government. It has thus put all the other states on notice that a question of primary importance to the nation and its form of government requires an answer to which no exception can be taken.

Mississippi Bill Seeks Book Curb

Disgusting

JACKSON, Miss., March 3 (AP) —The dispute over racial segregation has spread to Mississippi libraries.

Approved by the Mississippi House and sent to the Senate is a bill requiring the State Library Commission to buy books emphasizing white supremacy.

One Mississippi legislator, Rep. Walter Phillips, called it "thought control"—a phrase made famous by Japanese police action during the Second World War.

GOVERNOR SILENT

Gov. J. P. Coleman declined comment on the 2-year-old measure.

In South Mississippi, a Jones county grand jury called for Statewide screening of school and library books to cull those critical of the Southern segregated way of life. No action has been taken on the grand jury request.

Unknown to most Mississippians. Rep. Russell Fox included in a $192,000 Library Commission appropriation for 1954-56 a stipulation that $5000 must be spent for "books dealing with the subject of ethnology."

Then, according to commission records, Fox told the purchasing department what type books to buy. All uphold white supremacy.

BILL DENOUNCED

The same bill—with minor changes—came up this week for reenactment in the House. It passed. But debate brought this statement by Phillips from the floor:

"You are legislating though control. The United States fought Hitler during the Second World War because he advocated a master race and required his book 'Mein Kampf' to be in every library and school."

SUIT ATTACKED

A $4,000,000 damage suit filed against the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, Autherine Lucy and other Negroes in Birminghahm yesterday was branded by the NAACP's attorney today as "either a counter-attack to escape prosecution . . . or two-bit publicity."

Thurgood Marshall, who led the NAACP's successful fight for the U. S. Supreme Court desegregation ruling, said he was convinced there were "good legal grounds" for a successful court fight against the University of Alabama's expulsion of Miss Lucy.

The University of Alabama, despite its expulsion of Miss Lucy, stands ready to admit bona fide Negro students if ordered by the courts. its officials said meanwhile

SPIES WILL AID FIGHT AGAINST INTEGRATION

Commercial Appeal

Mississippi Patrol Chief To Head Secret Agents

Wed. 5-16-36

SOME MAY BE NEGROES

Memphis, Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss. Bureau

JACKSON, (Miss.), May 15. — Secret investigators and informants will be hired by the State Sovereignty Commission as Mississippi's "eyes and ears" in its fight against integration.

Employment of the agents was authorized by the commission meeting Tuesday with Gov. J. P. Coleman, chairman of the 12-member legislative created segregation "watchdog" group. They will check on maneuvers of those seeking to force integration in Mississippi.

Hicks To Head Agents

The investigators will work under Leonard C. Hicks, chief of the State Highway Patrol and former sheriff of Sharkey County, who was hired by the commission to have charge of that program. Mr. Hicks will leave the highway patrol if he accepts the assignment.

Governor Coleman recommended Mr. Hicks "because I feel he can get in and get the kind of information we want to be ready for all counter-attacks."

"When Thurgood Marshall (chief counsel of tre National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) says a suit is to be filed in Mississiippi, I want to find out what there is to it." Governor Coleman said. "They will be able to check on those signing the integration petitions ad other clanadersine actions of those opposed to segregation."

Sillers Asks Secrecy

It was Speaker Walter Sillers of the House of Representatives who suggested that names of the investigators be kept secret.

In support of the secrecy proposal, Hugh N. Clayton of New Aalbayn said, "We might have to use some Negro investigators."

Ney Gore, attorney of Marks and Quitman County legislator, was employed as a full-time executive director of the commission at $7,200 a year. Mr. Gore will have offices in the State Capitol, with a staff.

Governor Coleman recommended the employment of Hal Decell, editor of the Deer Creek Pilot at Rolling Fork, as director of a large scale information program designed to get Mississippi's position to states outside the South. He would be paid $6,500 a year for the full-time assignment, which would necessitate the leasing of his newspaper.

Speaker Sillers questioned whether Mr. Decell "is in full sympathy with us."

Can Manage DeCell

Explaining that Mr. Decell was his publicity manager in last summer's gubernatorial campaign, Governor Coleman said "I have no doubt about it, anyway I can manage him."

"I will personally vouch for Mr. Decell's loyalty," the Governor added.

Senator Earl Evans Jr. of Canton, said "This is a big job and we will need experts to help map our program and it is imperative that we get a man who will fit into the pattern."

Governor Coleman said the commission is also planning to secure the services of "an outstanding newspaperman" to serve as a consultant on its informational and advertising program.

Secret Agent Use Decided In Mississippi

Post-Herald Wed. 5-16-36 Birmingham, Ala.

JACKSON, May 15 (AP) — Mississippi's State Sovereignty Commission, watchdog of states' rights, today voted to hire secret agents to serve as "eyes and ears" in the fight to keep segregation.

Along the same lines, the 12-member commission voted to spend state money to "buy information" about activities in the integration camp.

In another move, the commission hired a full-time publicity director to explain to integrationists Mississippi's position concerning segregation.

The action was part of what Gov. J. P. Coleman, commission chairman, labeled an attempt to bring this commission into its full effect and fruition."

The commission was set up by the 1956 Legislature to prevent federal "encroachment" upon states' rights with the segregation question as the main objective.

In debating the issue of hiring undercover agents, the sovereignty commission agreed upon secrecy because, among other reasons "it's possible we may want to hire a Negro" to spy upon Negro activities within Mississippi.

Coleman called attention to the FBI's use of informants and said the SSC would operate in the same manner.

MAGAZINE BAN URGED AT NATCHEZ SCHOOLS

Life, Time, Look Anti-South Boards Are Told

Wed. 5-16-36

Special to The Commercial Appeal

NATCHEZ, Miss., May 15.—request that Life, Time and Look magazines be banned from the public schools of Natchez and Adams County has been received by the city and County school boards.

Memphis, Tenn.

In letters to both boards, G. L. Tutor, president of the Adams County Citizens Council, urged that consideration be given to the harm such publicatons can cause because of the anti-South articles appearing in them.

Mr. Tutor said the board of directors of the Citizens Council approved the request and added that the council was not trying to pressure or dictate to the local boards.

Anti-South articles in the magazines were described as "perverted and strongly biased."

Bias Stretches To Phone Lines

Herald Tribune Thurs. 4-26-56

JACKSON, Miss., Apr. 25 (AP).—A Public Service Commisioner today planned to ask telephone companies to maintain segregation on party lines.

New York, N.Y.

Commissioner Norman A. Johnson jr said he had received several complaints about "Negroes and whites being on the same party line" and would ask for segregation to "avoid a big commotion."

Coleman Is Inaugurated; Pledges Race Separation

Times-Picayune

Miss. Governor Vows State Will Obey Laws

Wed. 1-18-56

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 17 — Strapping James Plemon Coleman Tuesday became Mississippi's 51st governor with the promise that his race-conscious state will be one of "law, not of violence."

P. 7

But the 42-year-old Coleman, who rose to the state's top job from humble farm beginnings, warned that even the power of the federal government could not force racial integration in Mississippi.

From Mississippians he called for calmness against outside threats on the racial question.

"The obvious intention of this propaganda is to frighten us, to throw us into panic, to destroy our judgment and to render us incapable of defending ourselves," Coleman declared.

New Orleans,

'Magic Remedy'

"The sentiment of Mississippi is unanimous—so we have nothing to fear unless it be 'fear itself'," he added.

La.

Mississippi, Coleman emphasized, "will not be found without that resourcefulness necessary to any future remedies which may be required," to keep its public schools segregated.

He said he knew of no "magic remedy" but that there were "multiplied means and methods, all perfectly legal, by which we can and will defeat integration of the races in our state."

Coleman took the oath of office on a specially constructed platform in front of Mississippi's 52-year-old state capitol.

White Present

Standing with him were outgoing Gov. Hugh White, chief justice Harvey McGehee of the state supreme court who administered the oath and former Judge John F. Allen, Kosciusko, under whom Coleman had served as district attorney.

The greater portion of his inaugural address was given over to the segregation question and its ramifications in Mississippi and nationally.

His statement that Mississippi under his direction would rule out violence in its plans for keeping segregation was addressed to the entire nation.

"I want to remind you (the rest of the nation) that for over 90 years the white and Negro people of Mississippi have lived side by side in peace and harmony," he declared.

Innocence Cited

Without directly referring to any of the acts of racial violence which have occurred in Mississippi, Coleman said that the "great overwhelming majority" of white people in the state "are not now guilty and never intend to be guilty of any murder, violence, or any other wrongdoing toward anyone."

Because of the high percentage of Negroes in Mississippi, "this problem is more acute here than in any other state in the Union," he declared.

"It is not something which can be viewed with complacency or ignored," he said, "and if you lived in Mississippi and knew the full situation, you would look upon it as we do."

To the Negroes of Mississippi he declared: "As governor, I shall always give sympathetic consideration to any of your problems which deserve the assistance of the state government.

"If you accept this opportunity, it will mean better days for all of us. If you reject it, the responsibility must be yours."

Warning Given

Coleman warned that "with all due respect to the mighty power of the United States government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done."

Coleman avoided any direct reference to the question of nullification and interposition action by the state against the US supreme court segregation decision—a legal step which he recently called "legal poppycock."

But obviously with his eye on a probable nullification move in the Legislature, Coleman told legislators he would present a special message on the subject.

"We have plenty of time," he declared. "You will be kept fully informed of all developments, so I respectfully request that all action of this kind be withheld until you shall have heard my special message."

United Front Sought

Whatever action Mississippi will take, he said, will be harmonized with other Southern states in order to present a united front.

Coleman drew the biggest applause from the crowd which watched the ceremony in brisk 40-degree weather when he said that he did not have the "slightest fear" that his successor in office would not find the separation of the races intact in Mississippi.

He emphasized one of his campaign declarations that under his administration the state would have no need to abolish its public schools in order to prevent mixing of the races.

The new chief executive, who built up a record as a major foe of gambling and rackets during the last four years in the attorney general's office, said he would deliver a special message to the Legislature on need for strengthening the law enforcement machinery in the state.

Legislature Commended

Coleman said he interpreted his oath to "faithfully execute" all laws not to mean that "the governor should attempt to take over in matters of purely local concern," but to see to it that "crime and criminals shall not oppress the God-fearing, Christian people of Mississippi."

He commended the Legislature for the speedy passage by both houses of his bill providing for the recall of local officers who fail to do their duties.

The recall measure had been his top legislative proposal for giving Mississippi better law enforcement.

In his 40-minute address, Coleman laid down the legislative framework within which he plans his administration to operate.

Proposals Listed

Categoricially, his proposals ran like this: Executive clemency — with background as a judge and prosecuting attorney, he said, "it will only be in the rarest cases that executive clemency will be extended."

He stressed the need for legislation however, creating a system of adult probation for criminal first offenders.

Regulation of public utilities—as a key part of his campaign promises he stressed need for "effective" state regulation of electric power companies, natural gas companies and telephone companies. Pointed out that Mississippi is only state not regulating electric and gas companies. Need, he said, is for a "regulatory body so well staffed and so well-trained that the rates, when fixed, will stand the test of reasonableness in the courts."

Agriculture and Industry

Agriculture and industry — he called for a six-point legislative program including:

1. Creation of special legislative committees to deal with economic welfare of state.

2. Divide present agricultural board, the other an industrial commission.

3. Provide sufficient funds for two boards to employ "best experts available," even if not Mississippians.

4. Both boards launch all-out drive to improve agriculture and bring industry to state.

5. Show business and industry Mississippi is a "safe place" to locate.

6. Strengthen education to make people more capable in all fields economic employment.

Foundation Endorsed

Education — endorsed the minimum foundation program for equalizing educational opportunities between races, enacted in 1953-55, and pledged "full resources" of administration for school program. Colleges and junior colleges.

Insurance — recommended legislation to raise minimum requirements for capital and surplus to organize new insurance companies in Mississippi, and warned people against buying insurance from "fly-by-night" companies which operate through the mail from other states.

Municipal aid—urged a "permanent program of financial aid" to municipalities, and called on legislature to give problem "full sympathetic attention."

Absentee Vote Law

Absent voter law—called on legislature to repeal widely abused absentee voting except for members of armed forces and employes of common carriers on scheduled runs.

Without discussion, Coleman also advocated:

Repeal of the "black market" liquor tax, putting homestead exemption in the constitution, old age welfare "to fullest extent of our financial ability."

Economy in government, promotion of rural electrification, fair legislation for labor and management, and a constitutional 30-day limit on special sessions of the Legislature.

Jackson, Miss., Sets Fines For Violations of Segregation Laws

Call Chr. 1-27-56 P. 13

Kansas City, Mo.

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — The Jackson City council, backing up its police department's vow to keep railroad and bus stations segregated, has passed an ordinance setting fines for anyone violating segregation laws.

Two weeks ago, Jackson police put up new segregation signs after Illinois Central Railroad and Trailway bus workers took theirs down on an order from the Interstate Commerce Commission against segregation of passengers traveling between states.

The council's action set fines of $25 to $100 or a 30-day jail sentence, or both, for violating segregation laws.

Eastland Urges South to Battle For Segregation

Star P. A-2

Sat. 2-4-56

Washington

By The Associated Press

Senator Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, has called on the South to offer "stern resistance" in its fight to maintain racial segregation.

D. C.

"There is no other alternative," he declared in a speech last night at Charlotte, N. C. He looked to the doctrine of interposition as the South's chief weapon.

Senator Eastland's plea was directed mainly to the South as he challenged the anti-segregation decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

He spoke to 400 members of the Mecklenburg County branch of the Patriots of North Carolina, a pro-segregation group. He pointed to interposition as the "legal and constitutional doctrine" for the fight against the racial rulings of the high court.

Future at Issue, He Says

"There is at stake the preservation of the American system of Government with its dual powers, which provide for individual liberty and freedom," Senator Eastland said. "There is further at stake the racial integrity, the culture, the creative genius and the advanced civilization of the white race."

Then he added: "The entire future of this country is at issue."

He called for a regional commission and the use of public funds in waging the South's battle.

"There is only one course open to us and that is stern resistance," he said. "There is no other alternative. We must fight them with every legal weapon at every step of the way."

Senator Eastland said that organizations supporting the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People in its war on segregation "run from the blood red of the Communist Party to the almost equally red of the National Council of Churches of Christ in the U. S. A."

Co-operative Organization

The National Council of Churches of Christ is a co-operative organization constituted by 30 of the major Protestant and orthodox communions of the United States.

It includes Presbyterian, Methodist, Baptist, Episcopal and other denominations and embraces 144,000 local parishes and more than 35 million church members.

Among the groups Senator Eastland blasted as allies of the NAACP were the Carnegie Foundation, the Southern Regional Council, the Marshall Field Foundation, the Rosewald Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation and the Dorothy and Louis Rosenteil Foundation.

Most of these groups had no comment, but Maxwell Hahn, executive vice president of the Field Foundation, said in New York that the foundation "believes that segregation based on race, color, creed or national origin is un-American" and that the foundation "will continue to make grants which uphold the Constitution of the United States."

VISIT DENIED KERSHAW BECAUSE OF LETTER

Ohioan Wrote He Would Talk Integration At Ole Miss

Commercial Appeal Feb. 2-4-56

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 3.—(AP)—An Ohio minister changed his mind about not discussing his anti-segregation views during a proposed address at the University of Mississippi and the school revoked his invitation.

Chancellor J. D. Williams said he notified the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford Thursday that it would be "unwise" for him to address students during Religious Emphasis Week beginning Feb. 12.

The Rev. Mr. Kershaw's name spread throughout the nation last summer when he won $32,000 on a television quiz program for his knowledge of jazz music.

Mr. Williams said he withdrew the invitation after the Rev. Mr. Kershew wrote the university he was "an active member" of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and would discuss his views on segregation if the question arose during his scheduled address.

He had been invited to speak on "religion and drama."

The Rev. Mr. Kershaw's letter deplored what he called "the distressing climate (of Mississippi that) has smothered the freedom necessary to all democratic thought; the freedom and candor, trust . . . and respect for the integrity of the individual to think responsibly his own thoughts . . . to ponder together issues such as this which have powerful impact upon our national and individual destiny."

After he won the money on "The $64,000 Question," the Rev. Mr. Kershaw announced plans to donate part to the NAACP and its desegregation fund. Representative Jim Morrow of Rankin County, Miss., called for public rebuke of the minister and revocation of the invitation.

The college board interviewed the Rev. Mr. Kershaw last month by telephone and reported he "gave assurance in no uncertain terms that he would not discuss integration" at the university.

The college board suggested the invitation stand because to revoke it "would be the kind of propaganda the NAACP would want." But the final decision remained with Chancellor Williams.

In his letter, the Rev. Mr. Kershaw said he had been misquoted about his plans for donating his winnings "but not about my convictions and attitudes."

He said he has "for years been an active member of the NAACP which I respect as an organization entirely loyal to the democratic traditions of the United States."

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 3 (AP)—An Ohio minister changed his mind about not discussing his anti-segregation views during a proposed address at the University of Mississippi. The school revoked his invitation.

Chancellor J. D. Williams said he notified the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford yesterday that it would be "unwise" for him to address students during religious emphasis week beginning Feb. 12. Mr. Williams said he had withdrawn the invitation after Mr. Kershaw had written the university that he was "an active member" of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People and that he would discuss his views on segregation if the question arose.

Puts Blame for Segregation Ban on 'Brainwashing' of Supreme Court

New York Times Jan. 30-56

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 29—Senator James O. Eastland said today that he believed "left-wing pressure groups are in control of the Government of the United States."

The Mississippi Democrat, who is chairman of the Senate Internal Security subcommittee, attributed the Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation to "left-wing brainwashing" of members of the court.

Senator Eastland said the South would oppose the court's decision "by constitutional, by honorable and by strictly legal means." He said the South "of course" would not oppose the decision by force.

The senator maintained that he was "upholding and defending and protecting the Constitution of the United States" in his opposition to the court ruling. He said the Constitution was "for us" in the fight against desegregation.

"There is no discrimination in the South," he said. "There are social questions that we think we know more about that others do who don't have those social questions.

"Segregation is in the best interest of both races. Both races develop their own culture, and develop better, when they are separated."

The Senator appeared on the National Broadcasting Company's television program, "Meet the Press."

Decision Called 'Invasion'

He said that "most of the progress the Negro race has made has been under a segregated system."

The court's decision, he added, was "a clear invasion of the Constitution that would destroy the states."

The Senator said that Mississippi Negroes had equality of economic opportunity and education. As for voting, he said that "any man who meets the qualifications can vote."

Senator Eastland refused to speculate on whom he might vote for in the face for President. He said he did not know Gov. Frank J. Lausche of Ohio, mentioned by some Southerners as a good candidate for the Democratic nomination.

"I don't have a segregation candidate and I don't have an integration candidate," he contended.

Kershaw Is Told Ole Miss Visit Is 'Unwise' Now

Commercial Appeal Memphis Feb. 2-56

Special to The Commercial Appeal.

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 2.—Chancellor J. D. Williams Thursday advised the Rev. Alvin Kershaw his scheduled visit to the University of Mississippi campus "would be unwise."

Chancellor Williams' action came after the Ohio Episcopal minister revealed he was a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Memp. 2-3-56

Revealed In Letter

The Rev. Mr. Kershaw told of his NAACP affiliation in a letter to the editor of the Mississippian, student newspaper, a United Press report from Oxford, Ohio, said Thursday. The Mississippian refused to release the letter Thursday.

Chancellor Williams wired the minister he thought it "would be unwise for you to appear" on a student Religious Emphasis Week program Feb. 19-23. He said his action resulted from letters the minister wrote him and the student newspaper.

The Rev. Mr. Kershaw, won $32,000 on a television program as a jazz expert and pledged part of his winnings to the NAACP's campaign to wipe out racial segregation.

Believed Settled

The controversy was believed settled Jan. 19 when the state College Board reported a check into the Rev. Mr. Kershaw's background made charges that he was an integrationist appear "vague and apparently unfounded."

Chancellor Williams said a letter he received from the minister "reveals information not given to the Board of Trustees that became the basis for the statement of the board."

"Your statement to the press and your letter to me will provoke additional controversy inconsistent with the purpose of the invitation for you to come," Chancellor Williams said.

UNIVERSITY, Miss. (ANP)—The Rev. Alvin Kershaw will be part of the University of Mississippi's Religious Emphasis Week despite attempts by segregationists to brand him an "NAACP lover."

Chancellor J. D. Williams of the university said the Oxford, Ohio minister who won $32,000 on the $64,000 Question CBS-TV Show would address students Feb. 12-14 on religion and drama.

Memp. 2-4-56

Several Mississippi state legislators had asked Chancellor Williams and the university's board of regents to cancel the Rev. Mr. Kershaw's invitation because he announced plans to donate a part of his winnings to the NAACP.

LAST WEEK, the board reported an investigation into Rev. Mr. Kershaw's background revealed nothing detrimental to the Southern way of life, and gave Chancellor Williams the authority on whether or not to revoke the minister's invitation.

The board added, however, it felt "a withdrawal of invitation would be just what the NAACP would covet most and would be used as propaganda against our state."

Chancellor Williams apparently agreed with the regents. He told newsmen:

"I just let the invitation stand."

State Rep. James Morrow of Rankin County, a leader of the group which opposed Rev. Kershaw, had earlier called for public rebuke of the minister for his stand "against our way of life."

He said he learned later, however, that Rev. Kershaw "was tricked" by leading questions into making the statement. Morrow apologized to the minister.

Last Summer, the Rev. Alvin Kershaw won $32,000 on the CBS television quiz program for his knowledge of jazz.

New York Times Fires Back At Eastland Committee

Journal & Guide

(This is a reprint of an editorial from The New York Times on the Senate investigation into Communist infiltration of the press.) Sat. 1-19-56. P. 3

"In executive hearings held recently in this city, in public hearings held last summer in Washington and now again in public hearings held in Washington, a Senate subcommittee headed by Senator James O. Eastland of Mississippi has been looking for evidence of what it considers to be subversive infiltration of the press.

Norfolk, Va. 38a

"WE DO NOT QUESTION THE right or the propriety of any investigation of the press by any agency of Congress. The press is not sacrosanct. It is as properly subject to congressional inquiry as any other institution in American life. It is the inescapable responsibility of Congress, however, to make certain that any such inquiry be conducted in good faith and not motivated by ulterior purpose.

"A few employees of this newspaper who have appeared before the Eastland subcommittee have pleaded the Fifth Amndment. A few others have testified to membership in the Communist Party over periods terminating at various dates in the past.

"SO FAR AS WE ARE aware, no present member of the Communist Party has been found among the more than four thousand employees on our rolls.

"The policy of this newspaper with regard to the employment of Communist Party members has been stated many times, and may be stated here again. We would not knowingly employ a Communist Party member in the news or editorial departments of this paper, because we would not trust his ability to report the news objectively or to comment on it honestly, and the discovery of present Communist Party membership on the part of such an employee would lead to his immediate dismissal.

"IN THE CASE OF THESE employees who have testified to some Communist association in the past, or who have pleaded the Fifth Amendment for reasons of their own, it will be our policy to judge each case on its own merits, in the light of each individual's responsibilities in our organization and of the degree to which his relations with this newspaper entitle him to possess our confidence.

"We may say this, however. We do not believe in the doctrine of irredeemable sin. We think it possible to atone through good performance for past error, and we have tried to supply the security and the favorable working conditions which should exist in a democracy and which should encourage men who were once misled to reconsider and to reshape their political thinking.

"WE HAVE JUDGED THESE men and we shall continue to judge them, by the quality of their work and by our confidence in their ability to perform that work satisfactorily. It is our own business to decide whom we shall employ and not employ. We do not propose to hand over that function to the Eastland subcommittee.

"Nor do we propose to permit the Eastland subcommittee, or any other agency outside this office, to determine in any way the policies of this newspaper. It seems to us quite obvious that the Eastland investigation has been aimed with particular emphasis at The New York Times.

"THIS IS EVIDENT FROM several facts: From the heavy concentration of subpoenas served on employees of this newspaper, from the nature of the examination conducted at earlier hearings by the subcommittee's counsel, Mr. Sourwine, and from that counsel's effort, at those hearings, to demonstrate some connection between a witness' one-time association with the Communist Party and the character of the news published in this paper.

"It seems to us to be a further obvious conclusion that the Times has been singled out for this attack precisely because of the vigor of its opposition to many of the things for which Mr. Eastland, his colleague Mr. Jenner and the subcommittee's counsel stand — that is, because we have condemned segregation in the Southern schools; because we have challenged the high-handed and abusive methods employed by various congressional committees; because we have denounced McCarthyism and all its works; because we have attacked the narrow and bigoted restrictions of the McCarran Immigration Act; because we have criticized a 'security system' which conceals the accuser from his victim; because we have insisted that the true spirit of American democracy demands a scrupulous respect for the rights of even the lowliest individual and a high standard of fair play.

"IF THIS IS THE TACTIC of any member of the Eastland subcommittee, and if further evidence reveals that the real purpose of the present inquiry is to demonstrate that a free newspaper's policies can be swayed by congressional pressure, then we say to Mr. Eastland and his counsel that they are wasting their time.

"This newspaper will continue to determine its own policies. It will continue to condemn discrimination, whether in the South or in the North. It will continue to defend civil liberties.

"IT WILL CONTINUE TO CHALLENGE the unbridled power of governmental authority. It will continue to enlist goodwill against prejudice and confidence against fear.

"We cannot speak unequivocally for the long future. But we can have faith. And our faith is strong that long after Senator Eastland and his present subcommittee are forgotten, long after segregation has lost its final battle in the South, long after all that was known as McCarthyism is a dim, unwelcome memory, long after the last congressional committee has learned that it cannot tamper successfully with a free press, The New York Times will still be speaking for the men who make it, and only for the men who make it, and speaking, without fear or favor, the truth as it sees it."

Faces Loss of Home, Business

Money Is Needed For Bias Fighter

Courier P.23

CLEVELAND, Miss.—Amzy Moore, with his back to the wall because of his association with the NAACP, faces the possibility of losing his service station and home due to strangling economic pressures brought by bigoted white Citizens Councils.

A plea for funds has been made in Moore's behalf by C. R. Darden, president of the Mississippi State Conference of Branches of the NAACP.

Moore is president of the Cleveland Branch of the NAACP and faces financial disaster unless immediate financial aid is forthcoming.

Pittsburgh Pa.

MOORE'S PLIGHT is but one of the hundreds of such cases under fire by the Citizens Councils, attempting to boycott Negro businessmen because of NAACP affiliations.

Hope for Moore and others may be taken in President Eisenhower's State of the Union Message in which he expressed concern over reports of repeated lynchings and other civil rights violations in the South.

The President urged Congress to immediately set up a bipartisan commission to investigate all charges of voting violations and economic pressure.

The case of Amzy Moore is one of the utmost importance in that here is a man who defies constant threats from the white race haters and continues his energetic fight for his people. That he heads the local NAACP is only part of the story of the battle he has waged.

TO KEEP him going and to erase the possibility of his losing his home, money is needed desperately.

Direct your contributions to the Amzy Moore Fund to C. R. Darden, 1124 Twenty-sixth Avenue, Meridian, Miss., with checks made out to the Mississippi State Conference of the NAACP.

Senator Eastland's Strange Contribution

Advertiser 4-4

The Louisville Courier-Journal

[Senator Eastland will speak at a meeting of the Montgomery White Citizens Council Feb. 9—Ed.]

Montgomery Ala.

COMPARED to Senator James Oliver Eastland, who is justifiably flattered by the comparison, John Caldwell Calhoun was an intellectual giant. There are other differences. Calhoun was a gentleman. His tongue was bitter but his epithets were civilized and his insults were polished. Eastland has called witnesses before Senate hearings a "God-damned son of a bitch" and a "Nigger," and shouted "liar" at an elderly colleague on the Senate floor.

When he could stay clear of his obsession with the virtues of slavery, Calhoun spoke well and debated with dignity and coherence. Eastland models his debating style on those of his fellow senators Knowland and McCarthy, demanding the "ejection" of Russia from the United Nations and the armed defense of Formosa, announcing that the Supreme Court, "as now constituted, is not judicially honest" and declaring—in 1952—that "a state of internal security emergency" existed which called for the round up of between 20,000 and 50,000 "agents of the Kremlin" amongst us, these to be consigned to concentration camps.

Bir. 1-30-56

Senator Eastland's contributions to our war-time harmony were to proclaim that Negro troops "would neither work nor fight" and to disclose a "mass rape" of German women in a Stattgart subway by Senegalese soldiers with French occupation forces. Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson reluted the first charge; General Devers denied the second after correspondents pointed out: (a) that Stattgart has no subway and (b) that there were no Senegalese with the French occupation forces.

But this is beside the point. We are more concerned with some parallels between Calhoun, upon whom history places much of the blame for the one-way road taken by Southern leaders between 1820 and 1861, and Eastland, who is now loudly demanding that the South return to that same devastated path.

Calhoun, who started as a nationalist and a constitutionalist, came in the end to demand a virtual prohibition of public debate on slavery, that the mails be searched for material opposing it and that the individual states should decide which federal laws to obey and which court decisions were applicable to them. "Nullification" of any act of Congress which displeased any individual state, became a Southern rallying cry and the inevitable end was the Confederacy and the war.

Rainbows On Our Highways

The Milwaukee Journal

IF, like Wordsworth, your heart leaps up when you behold "a rainbow in the sky," it's going to jump right out of your mouth when auto manufacturers get through with you.

The two tone, triple tone, four tone, myriad tone cars that pack the highways are doomed if a new development by the du Pont Co. catches on with auto color designers. And, unless designers have changed, it probably will. Du Pont has come up with a new car finish which will make autos change colors as they pass—or as the light changes.

The seaweed green car you see approaching will turn shocking pink as it nears, switch to vivid red abeam, glow into puple as it passes and rush off down the highway flashing like a rainbow—"mocking the air," as Shakespeare said, "with colors idly spread."

For complete confusion, think of the police chasing bank robbers or a woman hunting an outfit to match her new car.

Howard Repeats Stand On FBI Crime Probes

World Tues. 1-31-56

Birmingham Ala.

LOS ANGELES (NNPA)—Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss., president of the National Medical Association, Friday repeated his charge that "the FBI cannot seem to solve a crime where a Negro is murdered by a white man in Mississippi."

The repetition was made in reply to a letter from J. Edgar Hoover director of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, calling "false," "irresponsible," "intemperate," and "baseless" charges Dr. Howard had made concerning the FBI in connection with the murders of Emmett Louis Till, the Rev. George W. Lee and Lamar Smith in Mississippi.

P. 1

Dr. Howard, who said he was visiting his family here, wrote in his reply to Mr. Hoover that the FBI director's letter had reached his Mound Bayou home "a full five hours after his first call from newspapers asking comment.

"I can only presume that you released the letter prior to the time it could possibly have reached me and that you wanted the whole matter to become an issue in the area of public controversy," Dr. Howard wrote.

The Mississippi physician told Mr. Hoover that he has talked with "many thousands of persons" in the past few months and "they are as dismayed as I am that murders can be committed in the United States and that murderers can escape indictment as in the George Lee and Lamar Smith cases, or win acquittal as in the Emmett Till case."

Four Measures Tighten Hold In Mississippi

Tues. 1-31-56

NOW GO TO SENATE

Memphis, Tenn.

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 30.—Four bills designed to tighten Mississippi's hold on racial segregation won overwhelming approval of the House of Representatives Monday.

P. 5

They were steered to passage by Chairman Joe Hopkins of the Judiciary Committee, and Representative Ney Gore of Quitman County, who as secretary of the sponsoring Legal Educational Advisory Committee, drafted them.

Covers Wide Field

One of the bills is aimed at Federal agents who come into Mississippi to question citizens about civil rights matters. It makes unlawful the action of any person to injure, oppress, threaten or intimidate any citizen of Mississippi in the free exercise or enjoyment of any right, privilege or immunity secured by Mississippi law.

It also prohibits any person "under color of any law, statute, ordinance, regulation or custom of any other state or the United States, to subject any inhabitant to the deprivation of any rights, privileges or immunities secured or protected by the state constitution.

The bill carries, on conviction, a maximum fine of $3,000 and-or five years imprisonment.

The other bills would—

Prohibit the fomenting and agitation of litigation or solicitation, receipt or donation of funds for the purpose of filing or prosecuting law suits.

Give any person engaged in any public business, profession or trade the right to choose and select the customers, patrons and clients, and the right to refuse to sell or render a service to any person.

A person refusing to vacate a place in question would be subject to a maximum fine of $500 and-or six months in jail. It applies to hotels, motels, tourist courts, restaurants, barber shops, theaters, public parks, swimming pools and stores.

Await Senate Action

Prohibit a person from creating a disturbance or breach of the peace in any public place of business subject to a fine of $500 and-or six months in jail.

The four bills now go to the Senate for action.

On the Senate side, a bill changing the name of the Jackson College for Negroes to Jackson State College was approved, along with one authorizing an additional deputy sheriff for Lee County.

The Senate also completed action on a proposed constitutional amendment limiting special legislative sessions to 30 calendar days, and sent it to the House for the required adoptions on three separate days.

Appointment of a joint committee to draft a "resolution of interposition," proposed in a House resolution, was approved by the Senate. After draft of the proposal, agreed to by Gov. J. P. Coleman, the Governor plans to address a joint session before it is considered.

The Senate meets at 10 Tuesday morning, and the House at 2 p.m.

New Englander Captured by Visit in Mississippi

Herald P. 9C

The following story was written for the Associated Press by Clark Samuel, editor of The Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter and leader of a group of New England newspapermen who toured Mississippi to observe conditions in that state at the invitation of the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission. Samuel says the story represents his personal views and not necessarily those of others who made the tour.

By CLARK SAMUEL
Editor, The Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter

BOSTON —(AP)— A group of weary New England newsmen, their minds filled with conflicting pictures of life in the Deep South, arrived Sunday night at Logan Airport in a special plane after a flight from Biloxi, Miss.

These were the editors and publishers of weekly papers who departed from Boston last Sunday and spent a week in Mississippi as guests of its state Sovereignty Commission created by Gov. J. P. Coleman to primarily interpret the state's official point of view in the segregation issue.

By bus and riverboat steamer, the newsmen were exposed to Mississippi's way of life. They talked to White and Negro leaders of various shades of opinion and intensity.

Traditional Southern hospitality was showered upon the visitors throughout the trip yet this writer must reluctantly report that in his opinion this hospitality was abused by some of the members of the group who evidently had closed minds from the start on Mississippi's social and economic problems. Some acted and talked like Northern ambassadors rather than students and observers.

The Mississippi reaction to this attitude received this comment from one of the state's leading columnists, Frederick Sullens, in the Jackson Daily News:

"One of those damnyankee editors now touring Mississippi at the expense of our people says he finds our Negroes have been brainwashed. He has his diagnosis in reverse. It is a pitiable fact that persons who have been thoroughly brainwashed think everybody else is similarly afflicted. That damnyankee had his mind made up on the race question before he came to Mississippi and he came with a determination not to change his mind."

However, in the group of 18, the majority were sincere in their efforts to learn, and as the days progressed they assembled a mass of factual material which they obtained by interviewing people of both colors in every walk of life—in the cotton fields and on the city streets.

To this writer, I cannot see integration happening in the state of Mississippi in my time. I believe I am in the minority among my colleagues in saying this. There are too many complex problems, and the people of both races I have talked to do not seem to look forward to a mingling of Negroes and Whites in the foreseeable future. It must always be remembered in any discussion of Mississippi and its future that its population in many counties is predominantly Negro. The people of Mississippi have lived under segregation since the first slaves were brought to the New World.

Many Northerners have no conception of the ravages of the War Between the States, as it laid the Southland bare and left it economically destitute. In 90 short years it has rebuilt its economy slowly, it has brought in new and needed industries to give its population work, and at the same time it has admirably somehow been able to preserve its heritage of gracious living and its guardianship of its Negroes.

On our trip we saw many new educational facilities for both White and Negro; we saw new industries obtained through "Southern" ingenuity such as tax concessions, choice locations, with ample water and transportation facilities and a compatible labor supply.

We were served in hotels and restaurants by cheerful Negroes who seemed as proud of the South and their way of life as we are of ours. They were not "Uncle Toms." They were merely people going about their daily work.

On the other hand, we talked with Negroes harvesting a bumper cotton crop whose ignorance was appalling and who appeared bewildered by our questions. Yet in their sorry plight they did not appear to be abused or underfed nor was there a Simon Legree lurking in the background.

In the cities — such as Natchez and Vicksburg — where Negro school facilities appeared to be superior, we found the homes of whites and blacks side by side on the same streets.

We can honestly report that we saw no signs of racial tension such as we have often observed in cities like Baltimore, Washington, New York and Boston. One evening we walked alone down several streets in a Negro section of a Mississippi city — something we would not dare to do as a White man in New York's Harlem. No one molested us, several said, "Good evenin'."

The problem, as Southerners we talked to recognize it, is the continued expansion of the educational program so that both White and Negroes may be better equipped to take their places in society.

There is no doubt in this writer's mind after many conversations with White Mississippians that these people will never accept the Supreme Court decision — they are so strong in their convictions that we can foresee only a tragic result if the decision is forced down their throats.

We talked to some highly intellectual and attractive Negro teachers at their new vocational school which was, incidentally, built before the Supreme Court decision. These teachers do not appear bitter nor unhappy. They are smartly dressed and speak with a sophistication and sense of humor which is refreshing in this troubled land. Their apartments are as well if not better furnished than our own little Cape Cod house, and their libraries reveal a love of literature for its own sake.

This trip of the Northern newspapermen was an experiment, and was widely covered by press and radio, and perhaps some of the old War Between the States spirit did crop up now and then. But when the goodbys were said, the handshakes were firm and sincere and we all felt grateful to the state of Mississippi for affording us this opportunity to visit and see for ourselves a part of the nation that seems destined for great expansion and prosperity in the immediate future.

If a comparable visit were made by a group of Southern newsmen to New England, we are confident they would find much to criticize and much to praise just as we did in the South.

The Negro in such large numbers, inconceivable to we in the North, is the exclusive problem of the Deep South in our opinion. It would be hypocritical and foolhardy for any writer who has spent but a few days there to presume to tell these people how they ought to run their affairs and how to change their ways overnight.

One businessman told us that integration would increase rather than decrease their racial problem because it would completely change their entire way of living.

Perhaps we can forsee the day when by mutual agreement the two races with separate cultures and equal opportunities can live harmoniously with equal dignity upon a middle ground that recognizes human equality under our democratic system which does not force a man to break bread with anyone other than that of his own choosing regardless of whether the man is red, white, black or blue.

Ultimately I would like to see Negroes taking an active part in town, county and state government just as they now do in our federal government. Then you would have segregation with representation — just as our forefathers fought for their rights to be represented in government.

And with Mississippi's surging progress in education as well as economy, better times for both white and black are sure to come.

It will take time, patience and goodwill on four sides — Southern and Northern Negroes, Southern and Northern Whites.

The Negro must be taught to accept his responsibilities as a citizen of the United States just as the White must be taught that the Negro has the right to full citizenship.

This ideal in the South can be accomplished by separate and segregated social life and a joint economic and administrative responsibility, we think.

This writer admits that after this short and sometimes exhausting trip to the Deep South, his story may be confusing, but it is his honest effort to throw one man's light upon a controversial and highly volatile subject that is a source of deep trouble.

Hot heads on both sides are not contributing to an intelligent solution. Imported speakers, burning crosses, inflammatory literature all combine to confuse the issues. Giving a little on both sides may help a great deal towards the common good.

They have a humorous song they sing down South these days that starts off, "Save your Confederate money, boys, the South shall rise again." Great sociological changes in history have often been accompanied by droll stories and funny songs. But they all have a segment of truth in them which anyone can see for himself: The South shall indeed rise again.

Northerners, After Tour, Say Negro Educational Gains Will Increase Tensions

Sun 10-14-56

BILOXI, Miss., Oct. 13 (UP)—Touring Northern newspaper men predicted today that the South's racial problems would increase as the whites gave further educational opportunities to Negroes in the hope of keeping them segregated.

Twenty representatives of weeklies, mostly in New England, were interviewed as they completed a week's tour of Mississippi as guests of the state.

Most of them characterized the racial problem as one the South would have to solve without outside interference.

They said that the biggest stumbling block to a solution was a deficiency of communications between the Negroes and whites. They offered the view that young people were more agreeable to racial integration than were their parents.

Range of the Tour

The editors were taken into representative areas of the state by the State Sovereignty Commission to let them judge conditions for themselves. The agency was created by the Legislature to wind ways of preserving separation of the races in the state that has the highest percentage of Negro population.

All the editors agreed that the tour was "fairly conducted" in that they had full opportunity to talk to Negroes and whites as they pleased. In answering questions by reporters they stressed that they were not posing as experts after a week's study, but were able to arrive at same basic conclusions.

Reaction varied from that of warm praise for the way Mississippi was rapidly building Negro schools to that of reproach for "shocking" conditions in regard to Negro voting.

Albert Rowbotham, editor and publisher of The Ramford Falls (Me.) Times, said:

"What is happening by increasing the educational standards of the Negro and at the same time not allowing him to vote is building up a reservoir of Negroes that is going to burst in the face of the people of Mississippi. The unrest is entirely on the voting question."

Some Other Comments

Curtis S. Johnson, publisher of The Deep River (Conn.) New Era, declared that "of those Negroes I have talked to the higher the social order and background the less happy they are with present conditions."

"The more they advance toward higher education the more this will increase the problem," he added.

John C. Bond, publisher of The Rockland (Mass.) Standard and Southshore News, said that the average Negro would rather stay as he is, but the educated Negro would definitely like to see something more than this."

James H. Marsden, publisher of The Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter, said that it would be a "bureaucratic blunder" for the Federal Government to force integration.

Sidney L. Cullen, editor of The Rockland (Me.) Courier-Gazette, found "a problem for Mississippi to solve."

Alfred Ball, president of the National Editorial Association and publisher of The Woodhaven (Long Island) Observer, expressed the view that Mississippi "has no problem that can't be solved over a period of years."

William B. Rotch, publisher of The Milford (N. H.) Cabinet, said that he had noticed "in many cases something almost like a fear complex on the part of the whites."

On the Spot

Mississippi officials feel strongly that the Northern press, through "sensationalism," has been misrepresenting the facts on segregation in their state. Last week Mississippi invited 20 small-town New England editors and publishers to come down at the state's expense to learn "the truth about what segregation is, and why." For seven days the editors toured the state as guests of the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission, set up by the legislature with $250,000 to protect the state's "way of life." The commission's pressagent, Hal DeCell, 32, promised "to show them whatever they want to see, because we have nothing to cover up."

Before the Yankee editors got started, Mississippi's Governor J. P. Coleman explained that segregation would continue in Mississippi "for at least the next 50 years. We don't intend to obey the Supreme Court's decision because it is not based on law." But, he assured the newsmen, "there is no tension or malice or ill will between the races. I have not heard of any trouble where [Negroes] have voted." Most Negroes do not vote, he said, because of unwillingness to pay the poll tax or failure to pass a literacy test.

As the chartered bus sped from Jackson along the historic Natchez Trace, some of the editors were surprised to find no segregation in places of business. Editor J. Clark Samuel of Massachusetts' Foxboro Reporter was struck by "fine colored schools" and the sight of Negroes and whites "living in compatibility." Publisher John C. Bond of Massachusetts' Rockland Standard noted "a real effort to lift the level of the Negro educationally."

But the editors found that Mississippi did not live entirely up to Governor Coleman's billing. Items:

¶ Mound Bayou, the biggest (pop. 1,350) all-Negro town in the state, votes in every election, Vice Mayor I. E. Edwards said, but the ballots are never counted by election officials at the county seat.

¶ In some areas, said Mound Bayou's Postmaster C. V. Thurmond, it "would be suicide for a Negro" even to attempt to vote. One minister who came to Itta Bena (pop. 1,725) to meet the editors said that when he had voted, his house was burned.

¶ In Cleveland (pop. 6,747) wealthy Attorney Ben Mitchell earnestly told the group: "The Negroes are just naturally and inherently inferior to white people."

¶ In Natchez (pop. 22,740) Negro leaders reported that the White Citizens' Councils have added to segregation practices. "We used to all pay taxes at the same window," said one, "but now they have one marked colored and the other white."

Midway through the tour, Editor Paul Cummings Jr. of New Hampshire's Peterborough Transcript told a Southern colleague: "I wasn't sure what to believe before I made the trip. Now I find the worst is true. We don't condemn you for practicing segregation. What we can't understand is how a people can be denied the right to vote in the U.S. To me this is unbelievable. I just couldn't believe it until I came down here and heard it firsthand." Then Editor Cummings turned to Pressagent DeCell, who also edits a weekly, and demanded: "Why did you people do this? Bring all of us down here, I mean. Doesn't it just show you up?"

"We just wanted to let you see for yourselves that Mississippians are not like the pictures painted by some Northern publications," replied DeCell.

"But we've only found out that basically those stories we read are true," said

Thatcher Walt—Clarksdale Press Register

INTERVIEW IN MISSISSIPPI*

The truth hurt.

Cummings. "Oh, they are sensationalized, but according to what we were told today, they are basically true."

As the end of the tour approached, a few of the New Englanders, like Editor Samuel, thought that "there will never be integration, Mississippi's way of life will remain as it is." But most of the editors felt that segregation was doomed even in Mississippi—though many believed that it might well linger as long as Governor Coleman's 50 years. Said Editor Cummings: "Equal justice must come. Our system makes no allowance for 47 states and Mississippi."

Has The Editors' Tour Backfired?

Jay Maher In The Delta Democrat Times

HAL DeCELL, publicity director for Mississippi's State Sovereignty Commission, said here last night he believes strongly the touring party of New England newspapermen "will benefit Mississippi and the South." He scoffed at expressions of a growing opinion the tour has backfired and is producing more blushes than proud smiles.

One visiting editor, however, said, "I wasn't sure what to believe before I made the trip. Now I find the worst is true."

He continued: "We don't condemn you for practicing segregation. That's a universal thing. What we can't understand is how a people can be denied the right to vote in the United States. To me this is unbelievable! I just couldn't believe it was true until I came down here and heard it first hand."

The 18 New England editors yesterday visited the Negro college at Itta Bena and all-Negro town of Mound Bayou. At both places they were told by Negroes that "pressures" (sometimes hidden and sometimes not) kept their race from "enjoying the rights of citizenship in Mississippi."

The newsmen were guests for dinner last night of Mississippi Power and Light Company at the company lodge near here. They arrived in the state last Saturday.

IN ONE bull session which followed the meal, a New Hampshire editor asked DeCell: "Why did you people do this? Bring all of us down here, I mean. Doesn't it just show you up?"

"We just wanted to let you see for yourself that Mississippians are not like the pictures painted by some Northern publications," DeCell repeated the announced reason for the tour, which is sponsored by the state's newly formed State Sovereignty Commission, an agency set up by the legislature to "safeguard Mississippi's way of life."

"But we've only found out that basically those stories we read are true. Oh, they are sensationalized—but according to what we were told today, they are basically true. And furthermore, it looks to me as if all these quotes from some members of our party are making even more sensational headlines," the visitor insisted.

DeCell disagreed with that theme, pointing out that many articles written for Northern readers indicate all Mississippians are murderers and Negro haters. By meeting the state's leaders, he said, the newsmen will be influenced by the knowledge of "how we really are."

Another Eastern editor said the trip had only confused him thus far. "How can an educated, obviously successful businessman expect me to swallow the kind of stuff one of them handed me here tonight? He told me calmly and patiently it was a scientific fact the Negro race is and always has been inferior," he said.

BUT the visiting editors obviously enjoyed the Tuesday night gathering here. Baxter Wilson, president of MP and L Company was master of ceremonies. He introduced the Deltans present, which included business and professional men from throughout the area. Brief talks were given by LeRoy Percy of Greenville, president of the Delta Council, and Hodding Carter, editor of the Delta Democrat-Times, who recently was a principal speaker at the New England Press Association convention.

Massachusetts Newsman Claims Preconceived Ideas Helped Abuse Hospitality Granted By Mississippi To Touring Fourth Estate

Advertiser Tues. 10-16-56 Montgomery, Ala. P 3-a

EDITORS NOTE: The following story was written for the Associated Press by Clark Samuel, editor of the Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter and leader of a group of New England newspapermen who toured Mississippi to observe conditions in that state at the invitation of the Mississippi Sovereignty Commission. Samuel says the story represents his personal views and not necessarily those of others who made the tour.

By CLARK SAMUEL
Editor, The Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter

BOSTON, Oct. 15 (AP)—A group of weary New England newsmen, their minds filled with conflicting pictures of life in the Deep South, arrived last night at Logan Airport in a special plane after a flight from Biloxi, Miss.

These were the editors and publishers of weekly papers who departed from Boston last Sunday and spent a week in Mississippi as guests of its State Sovereignty Commission created by Governor J. P. Coleman to primarily interpret the state's official point of view in the segregation issue.

By bus and riverboat steamer, the newsmen were exposed to Mississippi's way of life. They talked to white and Negro leaders of various shades of opinion and intensity.

Traditional southern hospitality was showered upon the visitors throughout the trip, yet this writer must reluctantly report that in his opinion, this hospitality was abused by some of the members of the group who evidently had closed minds from the start on Mississippi's social and economic problems. Some acted and talked like northern ambassadors rather than students and observers.

The Mississippi reaction to this attitude, received this comment from one of the state's leading columnists, Frederick Sullens in the Jackson Daily News:

"One of those damnyankee editors now touring Mississippi at the expense of our people says he finds our Negroes have been brainwashed. He has his diagnosis in reverse. It is a pitiable fact that persons who have been thoroughly brainwashed think everybody else is similarly afflicted. That damnyankee had his mind made up on the race question before he came to Mississippi and he came with a determination not to change his mind.'

However, in the group of 18, the majority were sincere in their efforts to learn, and as the days progressed they assembled a mass of factual material which they obtained by interviewing people of both colors in every walk of life—in the cotton fields and on the city streets.

IN MINORITY

To this writer, I cannot see integration happening in the state of Mississippi in my time. I believe I am in the minority among my colleagues in saying this. There are too many complex problems, and the people of both races I have talked to do not seem to look forward to a mingling of Negroes and whites in the foreseeable future. It must always be remembered in any discussion of Mississippi and its future that its population in many counties is predominantly Negro. The people of Mississippi have lived under segregation since the first slaves were brought to the new world.

Many northerners have no conception of the ravages of the war between the states, as it laid the Southland bare and left it economically destitute. In 90 short years it has rebuilt its economy slowly, it has brought in new and needed industries to give its population work, and at the same time it has admirably somehow been able to preserve its heritage of gracious living and its guardianship of its Negroes.

On our trip we saw many new educational facilities for both white and Negro; we saw new industries obtained through "southern" ingenuity such as tax concessions, choice locations, with ample water and transportation facilities and a compatible labor supply.

CHEERFUL NEGROES

We were served in hotels and restaurants by cheerful Negroes who seemed as proud of the South and their way of life as we are of ours. They were not "Uncle Toms." They were merely people going about their daily work.

On the other hand, we talked with Negroes harvesting a bumper cotton crop whose ignorance was appalling and who appeared bewildered by our presence and our questions. Yet in their sorry plight they did not appear to be abused or underfed nor was there a Simon Legree lurking in the background.

In the cities—such as Natchez and Vicksburg — where Negro school facilities appeared to be superior, we found the homes of whites and blacks side by side on

We can honestly report that we saw no signs of racial tension such as we have often observed in cities like Baltimore, Washington, New York and Boston. One evening we walked alone down several streets in a Negro section of a Mississippi city—something we would not dare to do as a white man in New York's Harlem. No one molested us, several said "Good evnin'."

CONTINUED EXPANSION

The problem as southerners we talked to recognize it, is the continued expansion of the educational program so that both white and Negroes may be better equipped to take their places in society.

There is no doubt in this writer's mind after many conversations with white Mississippians that these people will never accept the Supreme Court decision—they are so strong in their convictions that we can forsee only a tragic result if the decision is forced down their throats.

We talked to some highly intellectual and attractive Negro teachers at their new vocational school whch was, incidently, built before the Supreme Court decision. These teachers do not appear bitter nor unhappy. They are smartly dressed and speak with a sophistication and sense of humor which is refreshing in this troubled land. Their apartments are as well if not better furnished than our own little Cape Cod house and their libraries reveal a love of literature for its own sake.

This trip of the northern newspapermen was an experiment, and was widely covered by press and radio and perhaps some of the old war between the state spirit did crop up now and then. But when the goodbyes were said, the handshakes were firm and sincere and we all left grateful to the state of Mississippi for affording us this opportunity to visit and see for ourselves a part of the nation that seems destined for great expansion and prosperity in the immediate future.

If a comparable visit were made by a group of southern newsmen to New England, we are confident they would find much to criticize and much to praise just as we did in the South.

The Negro in such large numbers, inconceivable to we in the north, is the exclusive problem of the Deep South in our opinion. It would be hypocritical and foolhardy for any writer who has spent a few days there to presume to tell these people how they ought to run their affairs and how to change their ways of 500 years overnight.

One businessman told us that integration would increase rather than decrease their racial problem because it would completely change their entire way of living.

Perhaps we can foresee the day when mutual agreement the two races with separate cultures and equal opportunities can live harmonously with equal dignity upon a middle ground that recognizes human equality under our Democratc system which does not force a man to break bread with anyone other than that of his own choosing regardless of whether the man is red, white, black or blue.

Ultimately I would like to see Negroes taking an active part in town, county and state government just as they now do in our federal government. Then you would have segregation with representation—just as our forefathers fought for their rights to be represented in government.

SURGING PROGRESS

And with Mssissippi's surging progress in education as well as economy, better times for both white and black are sure to come.

It will take time, patience and goodwill on four sides—southern and northern Negroes, southern and northern whites.

The Negro must be taught to accept his responsibilities as a citizen of the United States just as the white must be taught that the Negro has the right to full citizenship.

This ideal in the South can be accomplished by separate and segregated social life and a joint economic and administrative responsibilitiy, we think.

This writer admits that after this short and sometimes exhausting trip to the Deep South his story may be confusing, but it is his honest effort to throw one man's light upon a controversial and highly volatile subject that is a source of deep trouble.

Hot heads on both sides are not contributing to an intelligent solution. Imported speakers, buring crosses, inflammatory literature all combine to confuse the issues. Giving a little on both sides may help a great deal towards the common good.

They have a humorous song they sing Down South these days that starts off. "Save your Confederate money boys, the South shall rise again." Great sociological changes in history have often been accompanied by droll stories and funny songs. But they all have a segment of truth i nthem which anyone can see for himself; the South shall indeed rise again.

NEGRO IS CLEARED IN ELEVATOR CASE

Times-Picayune Wed. 10-17-56

BIRMINGHAM, Oct. 16 (AP) — A Negro minister has been acquitted of disorderly conduct charges preferred when he refused to get on an office building elevator reserved for Negroes.

Rev. T. N. Nelson

"I'll enforce the law," said recorders Judge Ralph E. Parker, "but there's no law that says whites and Negroes must ride separate elevators," he dismissed the charges against Rev. T. N. Nelson, 50.

The judge also said that Nelson wasn't guilty of disorderly conduct, which requires boisterous, profane, loud language, or some action tending to cause a breach of the peace.

Touring Mississippi—

Editors' views on South mixed

BY PRENTISS COX, News Jackson bureau

VICKSBURG, Miss., Oct. 11.—New England newspaper editors left by boat down the Mississippi River for Natchez today, leaving in their wake a cross-current of opinionated expressions on segregation in the South.

The newsmen, guests at a dinner last night at which they heard 14 Vicksburg citizens give their views on the problem of racial separation, said they were most impressed by the fact that Vicksburg people admitted the presence of a problem.

But opinions as to the eventual outcome of the issue were varied.

GIVE AND TAKE discussions by people on both sides who recognize there is a problem will eventually lead to its solution said William B. Rotch, editor of the Milford (N. H.) Cabinet.

Robert S. Baram, secretary of the New England Weekly Press Assn. and Boston University journalism profesor, said he believed Mississippi's program of industrial expansion would indirectly lead to integration.

But J. Clark Samuel, editor of the Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter and president of the Massachusetts Press Assn., said "you just can't change a people's way of life." Earlier he had predicted "there will never be integration in Mississippi" and conceded stories in national magazines on the racial issue in the South "are distorted."

SAMUEL'S VIEWS, however, clashed with other expressed views.

Paul C. Cummings Jr., editor and publisher of the Peterborough (N. H.) Transcript, said Mississippi "is in the process of evolving toward integration, begrudgingly." He said racial barriers eventually will fall in the state and throughout the South "by one of two methods—evolutionary or revolutionary."

"The problem of segregation is not a Mississippi or area problem," said Cummings, "it's the problem of the 48 states."

Most of the 20 editors agree that "integration will come to Mississippi," but agree with the state's governor, J. P. Coleman, that "that time is far in the future."

The editors planned a deep sea fishing trip for Saturday as they launched the fifth day of their State Sovereignty Commission-sponsored tour.

Most members of the group are in the state with assignments from national magazines, wire services, and metropolitan newspapers in the East. Their stories will be based on observations of problems encountered since they entered Mississippi last Sunday.

TODAY THEY WERE deluged with more of the "ever-present" southern hospitality as they paddled down the Mississippi River on the historic old "West," U. S. Corps of Engineers sternwheeler, one of the last relics of its type from the River's past.

Tonight they'll rest at the river port of Natchez and tomorrow will go by way of Columbia to the Gulf Coast where fun will be the main diet.

Al Ball of Long Island, N. Y., president of the National Editorial Assn., said "Southern people are certainly wonderful."

"If I weren't already so old, I'd sure be thinking about moving South."

BUSINESS TRIPS today will probably conclude the formal mention of "segregation" and its problems, with "fun" set for the final-day agenda.

There was some curiosity aroused among members of the group concerning conditions in the all-Negro community of Mound Bayou.

SEGREGATION: PART IV

Sirs:

After reading Part IV of your excellent segregation series ("The Restraints: Open and Hidden," LIFE, Sept. 24), I would like to congratulate you on this, your finest attempt—and greatest achievement.

JOHN PONCIANO

Limestone, Maine

Sirs:

The amount of research, skillful writing and, what is more important, the intelligent, unbiased approach in your comprehensive segregation series rates highest praise! Never have I seen the entire Negro question more fully and factually yet so concisely covered.

Having taught in a well-integrated California school (11% Negro), I consider your segregation article of more than vicarious interest.

TEDD D. WOODS

Sirs:

LIFE's series is a masterpiece of literary art. It belongs on the list of required reading for discussion in every high school and P.T.A.

JAMES T. ROGERS

Sirs:

About the Albert Thorntons, you say they get about $120 a month. In my opinion that is mighty good. My father-in-law and his wife only get $42 a month. My uncle sent his sons through the University of Georgia, and he only made $150 a month. And your "downtrodden hero," Professor Thornton, has trouble doing it on $6,600 a year. My, my, my.

There are about 15 clubs, beaches and golf courses around here that won't let me or my kids in. But I am not "frustrated." Neither are my kids, for we believe in enjoying what we have got and if we want more, get out and work for it.

Why don't you write about the race riots up north, or about 10 and 12 Negroes living in one room in Harlem?

JOE O. FARMER

Nicholson, Ga.

Sirs:

I couldn't help noticing the deplorably shabby condition of the Tanners' shack. Yet there is a brand-new, shiny TV set in the corner. The southern Negro just can't learn to economize wisely.

BARBARA GORDON

Boston, Mass.

● Mrs. Tanner's TV set was a gift from her brother when he started his service in the Army.—ED.

Sirs:

Less than a week after the first of the series appeared, school opened and our seventh-grade all-Negro class in Phillips Elementary School advanced in membership from 31 to 44. In the class were seven pupils fresh up from the South. They dressed like any other children, but, alas, the moment they opened their mouths there was near bedlam because the regular students, who were either born or had been in Chicago for some time, tended to ridicule their mannerisms, their southern dialect.

It at once became apparent that the northern young Negro student, unaware of his past, his rise from slavery to freedom and near first-class citizenship, was himself in dire need of integration with his own ethnic group. Toward this end a project was initiated titled, "Let My People Go."

Using LIFE magazine, the students prepared a display showing the Negro from the time of slavery when he was forcibly transported from the shores of Africa to the present.

Even though our project is not yet finished, the class members, learning their mutual heritage, have already grown to work in harmony.

New England Editors See Tension In Mississippi

BILOXI, Miss., Oct. 13 (AP)—A week's first hand study has convinced the majority of a group of New England editors there is racial tension, fear and unrest in Mississippi.

They found it, they said, especially among Negroes on the right-to-vote question. Some saw more tension among Whites than Negroes.

A poll by reporters showed these other conclusions by the weekly editors who were guests of the state on a "Come See For Yourself" mission:

Almost complete agreement they were given a fair picture of Mississippi.

A majority belief most Mississippi Negroes are not happy.

Finally, unanimity that Mississippi does have a segregation problem but disagreement whether she should be left alone in solving it.

Albert Rowbotham, editor and publisher of the Ramford Falls, Times, said, "The unrest is almost entirely on the voting question." Upgrading Negro education while not allowing him to vote is building up a reservoir of feeling "that is going to burst in the face of the people of Mississippi," he said.

A gradual enfranchisement of the Negro, begun "right now," would remove the main argument of agitators, the weekly editor said.

Curtiss S. Johnson, publisher of the Deep River (Conn) New Era, said he was shocked to learn Negroes in some areas are not allowed to vote.

SENSES FEAR

Paul C. Cummings Jr., editor and publisher of the Peterborough (N.H.) Transcript, sensed a general fear among white people "of what would happen" if the Negro is allowed to vote.

J. Clark Samuel, editor of the Foxboro (Mass.) Reporter and president of the Massachusetts Press Assn., "saw less racial tension in Mississippi. . .than in New York" and some other northern cities.

Samuel, whose views were not in accord with the majority, also saw segregation as "the exclusive problem of the South."

He also foresaw continued segregation by "mutual agreement" with the two races living apart but "harmoniously with equal dignity."

Similar views came from Alfred Ball, publisher of the Woodhaven, (L.I.) Osberver and president of the National Editorial Assn.

"I saw no evidence of racial tension," he said. "Mississippi is doing everything possible to solve the problem, not only to educate the Negro but to make him happy."

DIGNITY AT STAKE

William V. Rotch, editor and publisher of the Milford (N.H.) Cabinet, said "The basic element of human dignity" is at stake in the South's Negro-white relationship.

"It can't be solved by pretending the problem doesn't exist, by intimidation, or patronizing benevolence."

Rotch also was among those sensing tension among the whites, "almost a fear complex."

John C. Bond, publisher of the Rockland (Mass.) Standard and South Shore News, said:

"I didn't feel any tension among the Negroes but I did feel it among the whites. The spirit of violence does not seem to be very far below the surface. Fear is causing it."

Rotch said "Every Negro I talked to privately was emphatic in denying" that he was happy.

"They resent not so much segregation itself as the indignity involved in it," he said.

VERY UNHAPPY

Richard J. Robertson, publisher of the Darier (Conn.) Review, said the Mississippi Negro is "decidedly not" happy, "nor can any man created as we all are by God be happy when he is not accorded individual dignity and respect."

To the almost complete agreement, they were given a fair picture of Mississippi, Robert S. Barram, Boston University journalism professor and secretary of the New England Weekly Press Assn., added:

"I would have liked to have had a good interview with a White Citizens Council group. The Council has been organized throughout the South to oppose integration.

Barram said presence of Negro leaders among the welcoming parties "would have been some evidence to support the usual statement by the white people that they get along so well with the Negro."

Barram was among those feeling "young white people have a more mature understanding of the problem than do their elders." He said "the hope of Mississippi" lies with its younger people.

The visit was a strange experiment by Mississippi whose citizens like to call their state "the most lied about in the nation."

Mississippi, whose 45 per cent Negro population is the highest in the nation, claims not to have "given an inch" on integration.

This week she bared herself to the world on how she treats Negroes—a subject jealously called her own business.

All Facts Not Told, NAACP Leader Says

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 12 (U.P.) An NAACP leader said today Gov. J. P. Coleman failed to tell touring New England newspapermen how many Negro voters have been disfranchised under his administration.

Field Secretary Medgar Evers said the visiting editors and publishers should have been told that more than 1000 registered Negro voters in Jefferson Davis County were disfranchised under tightened election laws after voting for more than 10 years.

"The newspapermen then would have been given a more accurate picture of part of the situation as it exists in Mississippi," Evers said.

Mississippians Urged To Solve Race Issue Thru Honest Discussion

State Press P. 7
Fri. 6-8-56
Little Rock, Ark.

JACKSON, Miss.—Mississippians were told Sunday by the NAACP's top executive that this state's racial tensions will settle down when Negroes are given their rights as citizens and that the desegregation question can be solved "by honest people sitting down and talking over ways and means."

Roy Wilkins, the Association's executive secretary, addressed a meeting of NAACP branches here.

Discussing race relations in this state where tensions have been high, Mr. Wilkins asserted that "there will be no real tranquility, no real economic stability, as long as 46 per cent of the state's population is held down, insulted, mistreated, denied voting rights, and equality in education." He maintained that "outside industry does not want to come to such a state."

(A recent survey has shown that many industries are reconsidering plans to move south until racial conflicts die down.)

"We are told over and over again that everything was fine between the races in the south until the Supreme Court made its ruling, or before the NAACP began to 'stir things up,'" the NAACP official noted. "Do they mean the sharecropping system was fine? Or Jimcro schools, waiting rooms and trains? Or the Negro jobs and Negro wage scales? Or sitting in the rear of buses and trolleys, and giving up seats to white people at the order of a bus driver? Or being shot for trying to register and vote?"

Persecution Arouses Sympathy

He declared that "all over the south our people are standing up to personal persecution. Those who hope to stop us with that had better think of something else. The more persecution, the more determined we become and the more sympathy we arouse in the nation."

State Press P. 8

In Mississippi, Mr. Wilkins contended, "today it is dangerous - - it may take bread from the mouths of your children, or a roof from the heads of your family - - to exercise freedom of speech - - on segregation - - freedom of petition, or even freedom of thought."

He termed it "one of the tragedies of the present situation" that "in many parts of the south . . . the white people and the Negroes who want to discuss the question of justice and of segregation are made to keep silent."

The NAACP spokesman sharply attacked what he called "a secret spy system" in Mississippi.

"Informers are to be paid to report on their neighbors, what they are thinking and what they are saying. Over in Soviet Russia, you know, they had a system of paying children to spy on their parents . . . We said it was horrible and uncivilized when we heard the Russians were doing it, but here in Mississippi in 1956, in the free land of America, we are to have secret police. Spies will tell who smiled at a Negro yesterday, or what Negro said he was sick of Jimcro, or what tired Negro woman said she wished she did not have to stand up while white men sat in the bus, or what white woman thought it was a shame the way Negroes are treated."

White People vs. Their Conscience

Mr. Wilkins declared that the NAACP is "helping Mississippi to redeem itself. We are showing it a path. We can imagine some of the difficulties white people are having with their conscience and their inner souls. They are searching, and some of them are trying. When they do change over, they will wonder why it took them so long. They will wonder where all the 'trouble' is they expected to find."

Touching on the question of interracial marriage, which has been used by some southerners as a 'reason' to continue segregated public schools, the NAACP official asserted that "our white folks always fall back on that when they can't think of anything else."

"Marriage is a personal contract between two people. We say it is the business of those two people. We are neither for intermarriage nor against it. We want protection for the Negro woman and the laws against intermarriage leave her without protection, free game for any hunter, with no legal penalties attached. Statistics show that where intermarriage is not prohibited by law the percentage is infinitesimal."

Maintaining that desegregation "cannot be stopped," Mr. Wilkins said that "those who attack the NAACP, a peaceful, law-abiding organization, are really attacking justice and murdering freedom."

Mississippi Roundup—

Be Fair On Segregation, Northern Editors Asked

Post-Herald
Birm, Ala
Thurs 6-14-56

JACKSON, June 13 (U.P.) — Mississippi today sent phamplets to editors throughout the North asking "fairness and a chance to present its side of the case" in the segregation fight.

The literature is being distributed by the State Sovereignty Commission, the state's official segregation "watchdog," and financed by tax money.

"Denied a voice with which to present the facts to the nation at large," the phamplet, says, Mississippians and Mississippi are turning to the grass-roots to obtain a fair hearing."

The circular was prepared by Hal Decelle, the commission's publicity man hired to get the "good" side of Mississippi before the nation.

"Mississippi has been the target of more unfounded acrimonious and antagonistic falsehood and/or misrepresentations —amounting to mass slander of all Mississippians—than any other state in history," the phamplet says.

It is illustrated by a drawing showing Mississippi as a woman holding a baby in her arms. A man with a shotgun called "national circulation seekers" point an accusing finger at her while "pressure groups" stone her.

"Don't stone until you hear her side," the caption reads.

Democrats In Mississippi Are Willing To Lead Fight To Preserve Dixie Ideals

Commercial Appeal Memphis, Tenn. Sun. 7-8-56 P. 4

Support Of Other Southern States Sought To Offset Hostility Expected From Northern Party Members In Chicago Next Month

By KENNETH TOLER

JACKSON, Miss., July 7.—Mississippi Democrats are apparently willing to stand alone—if necessary—in the battle for preservation of the Southern way of life.

At the moment, however, they hesitate to take definite steps in that direction in advance of anticipated hostile treatment at next month's national convention in Chicago. That doesn't mean they are burning their bridges behind them.

They are still hopeful of support from enough Southern states to temper the wounds to Southern customs and traditions in the national party platform.

Mr. Toler

Southern delegates to the national convention are counting heavily on the influence of their congressional leaders to be felt in Chicago. However, they will likely find out in no uncertain actions that the Washington standing means nothing in Chicago, come Aug. 13.

Blow Aimed At South

Fact is, the Northern party members would like to get rid of the Democratic chairmen of the influential congressional committees who hail from below the Mason-Dixon line. Some of the most radical, prodded no little by certain racial groups, are even planning to get the national convention to disclaim the Southern party leaders.

On the basis of anticipated hostilities to Southern segregation and states' rights positions, Mississippi Democrats are expected to keep intact a planned "retreat" in event it becomes necessary to back-track after the Chicago meeting.

Just what road the Mississippi Democrats would take if compellel to repudiate the actions in Chicago is the big question. The Republican route many of them took four years ago has just as many racial-separation roadblocks.

Until the heat of battle cools from the July 16 state convention, the intrastate party controversies are expected to continue to command front line attention. Contrary to what could be read into the fight, the Mississippi Democrats are in accord on preservation of segregation, as well as maintenance of the sovereignty of the individual states.

No Strings Wanted

Gov. J. P. Coleman, titular head of the party in Mississippi, wants the national convention delegates to go to Chicago without "strings" attached to their credentials. That is the same position taken by a majority of the state party members, as well as delegates.

A minority, which includes strong state leaders, would like to have the delegates instructed as to what course to take in event some of the pre-convention efforts to disregard Southern customs are successful. Such a course, however, would endanger seating of the delegates, something the Northern antagonists would like to see done without the necessity of a challenge from the convention floor.

In early state convention maneuvering, Governor Coleman was opposed to reconvening the state group after the Chicago meeting unless similar steps were taken by a substantial number of other Southern states. He said in the past Mississippi had been made the scapegoat by standing out for its beliefs even to the extent of walking out of the national convention—almost alone.

However, the Governor backed down when many state leaders lined up behind a recommendation by Atty. Gen. Joe T. Patterson that the state convention delegates reassemble after the Chicago meeting to appraise what was done in the light of Mississippi's demands for preservation of segregation and curtailment of Federal encroachment on the sovereignty of the state via the United States Supreme Court.

A "compromise" was suggested. It came from House Speaker Walter Sillers who took a leading part in the 1948 states' rights bolt and who was still so dissatisfied with his original party in 1952 that he did not support its presidential candidates.

Rules May Be Changed

The Sillers plan, favored by the Governor, calls for a change in convention rules to permit a reconvening, something not now possible after the business of a convention is completed. It provides a recall of the state convention on petition of 20 per cent of its delegates or by a majority vote of the State Executive Committee.

Others, many of them Mississippians for States' Rights who would qualify an independent slate of presidential electors rather than "bow" to the national party officers, want to "peg" the reconvening. They propose that a "date certain" be set at the approaching state convention for the reconvening.

Governor Coleman claims more than a majority of the 280 convention votes to defeat the "date certain" proposal. He does not feel it is necessary since the actions of the delegates in Chicago will largely be gaged by "principles" to be adopted here later this month.

Purpose behind the recessed state convention is to repudiate what the state delegates may do —or agree to rather than being kicked out of the convention. It has the backing of the strong Mississippi Association of Citizens Councils whose members have been elected to "key" positions in state party councils in the six congressional district caucuses.

Mississippi's strong pro-segregation and state sovereignty position has gained the support of the Mississippi State Bar in a report of a special committee on maintenance of constitutional rights of the states and individuals. Chairman of that committee is Hugh N. Clayton of New Albany, who is serving out the unexpired term of the late former Gov. Fielding L. Wright as democratic national committeeman. Mr. Clayton is assured of a full term in his own right at the approaching state convention.

Taking cognizance of the United States Supreme Court's invasion of the legislative field, a statement of principles adopted by the State Bar Association states:

"In our time we have seen the Supreme Court set up and follow a policy of attrition whereby, now through gradual extension by novel construction — then through violent departure from proper constitutional procedures by amending rather than interpreting—this court is destroying the rights of the several states and the people thereof; granting to the Federal Government powers not delegated to it by the Constitution, but which were reserved to the states and to the people."

A six-point course of action adopted by the Bar Association calls upon "all citizens of Mississippi of every race, color and creed to work together for the common good."

"We appeal to them not to be provoked by agitators and trouble makers invading our states, to scrupulously refrain from disorder and lawless acts, to insure equal justice to all before the law, and to bear patiently their part of the cost and the labor required to provide and maintain equal facilities for both races in education and other phases of public service," the resolution stated.

Negro Educator Favors Keeping Segregation

Eagle P. 1 Thurs. 7-19-56 Tulsa, Okla.

Dr. White, of Miss., Blasts Powell for School Amendment

MOUND BAYOU, Miss. (ANP) Dr. J. H. White, president. Mississippi vocational college, Itta Bena, Miss., is advocating retention of segregation for what he calls "continued racial harmony."

The educator made this plea here Thursday during the 69th anniversary celebration of the founding of this all Negro town

According to Dr. White, Negroes of the South should have the intelligence to size up the situation and not throw away (schools) by attempting to disrupt peaceful conditions which have existed for so many years...just to sit, eat and ride beside a white person."

He criticized Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (., N. Y.) for the punitive amendment the congressman proposed to the federal aid to school construction bill. He blamed this amendment for the defeat of the measure.

"Can you imagine a Negro congressman blocking such a needed measure just to make the headlines? Yet you will find some Negroes in Mississippi supporting him," Dr. White asserted.

He held that Powell will be directly responsible for failure to secure much needed school facilities, thus "retarding thousands of children in this country."

Miss. to Use 'Secret Service' To Inform on Integrationists

Staff of Investigators to Help State Sovereignty Commission

Atlanta, Ga.

By KENNETH TOLER

Mississippi Bureau Chief, The Memphis Commercial Appeal
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

JACKSON, Miss., May 19—Mississippi's segregation "watchdog" commission will use human "bloodhounds" in tracking down the movements of integrationists.

It will be done by secret investigators and paid informants authorized this week by the legislative-created 12-member State Sovereignty Commission headed by Gov. J. P. Coleman.

A former Sharkey County sheriff, now serving as chief of the state highway patrol, will be in charge of the investigative division of the commission which will spearhead Mississippi's legal efforts to maintain segregation. He is Leonard C. Hicks, a brother-in-law of the late former Gov. Fielding L. Wright, onetime leader in the States Rights movement against civil rights actions.

Chief Hicks will leave the highway patrol to head up the division which will be staffed with a "reasonable" number of secret investigators to be approved by Gov. Coleman. Members said it will operate somewhat like the Federal Bureau of Investigation insofar as "informants" are concerned in that those who supply information will be paid for it out of the $250,000 voted the commission at the recent legislative session.

Might Employ Negroes

In keeping the investigators secret to all except commission members, the group pointed out that Negroes may be employed and it would be best not to disclose their identities.

Gov. Coleman proposed the investigators as an important "arm" of the commission in furnishing it with the background on maneuvers of the integrationists, as well as their identities and plans, discussed in clandestine meetings. He said with a long career as a law enforcement officer, Chief Hicks was ably qualified to handle the assignment.

"Whenever there is a petition filed for integration we will want to see what the basis is to it," Gov. Coleman said. "When suits are filed, the investigators will be used to gather information on the people involved for use in drawing up court procedures."

Gov. Coleman suggested that the investigators could also check on violations of the numerous laws designed to strengthen Mississippi's position in maintaining segregation, especially the act against "fomenting agitation or encouraging suits" against segreation, which prohibits the solicitation of funds for such purposes.

The commission also approved employment of a publicity director to handle a planned nationwide campaign to "beam" Mississippi's position on segregation above the Mason-Dixon Line. It will be conducted through the newspapers, radios and television stations.

Hal DeCell, editor of the weekly newspaper, the Deer Creek Pilot, at Rolling Fork, has been offered that post. He served as the governor's publicity director in his successful campaign last summer.

Mr. DeCell's job would be to "give the nation the real facts about Mississippi" in an effort to swing public opinion favorable to Southern customs and traditions.

Directing the over-all campaign will be State Rep. Ney Gore Jr., an attorney of Marks and member of the House from the Delta's Quitman County. He served in that same capacity with the defunct Legal Educational Advisory Committee which drafted the numerous laws enacted at the recent legislative session tightening Mississippi's hold on segregation—in the schools as well as at all levels.

Rep. Gore also was secretary of a special study committee which drafted Mississippi's Negro-white public school equalization program, designed to bring Negro schools to a par with the whites in an effort to discourage integration and encourage "voluntary" segregation in the face of the integration decisions of the United States Supreme Court.

Considerable progress has been reported on the equalization program in adjusting the "gap" in teachers' salaries, transportation as well as buildings.

Gives Wide Powers

Some legislators feel that the sovereignty commission's action in authorizing employment of the secret investigators is contrary to the general purpose outlined by the Legislature in its creation. However, the act is broad enough to give the commission wide powers in all efforts aimed at preserving segregation.

The creative act also permits the Sovereignty Commission to "receive contributions, donations and gifts of money and-or property from any state, department, agency, commission or subdivision thereof, and from any person, corporation or organization, to be expended by it in carrying out the objectives and purposes hereof."

Mississippi Will Set Up Integration Spy System

News & Observer P. 1 Sec. 5-16-56

Raleigh, N.C.

JACKSON, Miss., May 15 (AP)—Mississippi's State Sovereignty Commission, watchdog of states' rights, today voted to hire secret agents to serve as "eyes and ears" in the fight to keep segregation.

Along the same lines, the 12-member commission voted to spend state money to "buy information" about activities in the integration camp.

In another move, the commission hired a full-time publicity director to explain to integrationists Mississippi's position concerning segregation.

The action was part of what Gov. J. P. Coleman, commission chairman, labeled an attempt "to bring this commission into its full effect and fruition."

The commission was set up by the 1956 Legislature to prevent federal "encroachment" upon states' rights with the segregation question as the main objective.

In debating the issue of hiring undercover agents, the commission agreed upon secrecy because, among other reasons "it's possible we may want to hire a Negro" to spy upon Negro activities within Mississippi.

Coleman called attention to the FBI's use of informants sand said the SSC would operate in the same manner. He called the investigators and informants, known but to the commission, "an official arm of state government."

The governor cautioned the commission not to panic. "I see no reason for alarm, frustration or futility," he said. "We have the ball and it's up to the opposition to take the initiative."

"After all, integration came about because the people gave up. We will not give up."

About segregation—

Northern newsmen invited to Mississippi 'to see truth'

Birm. Ala. News 6-13-56

JACKSON, Miss., June 13—(AP)—The State Sovereignty Commission has made its first attempt to "explode the falsehoods that have grown to be accepted as truths" about segregation in Mississippi.

38a

Hal DeCell, SSC public relations director, issued personal invitations to dozens of Northern newspapermen to visit Mississippi and "see hte situaton for themselves."

DeCell, former editor of The Deer Creek Pilot and campaign manager for Gov. J. P. Coleman, said all Mississippi asks is "fairness and a chance to present its side of the case."

"We make no claim of being completely without fault—what state is?

"HOWEVER, the continuation of utterly false accusations against our state and its people has led to the creaiton of a public relations department of the State Sovereignty Commission to aid in the dissemination of truth about Mississippi to fair-minded citizens of our nation."

The 1956 Legislature established the SSC to prevent "federal encroachment upon states rights." It replaced the disbanded Legal Education Advisory Committee, which was set up to seek means of evading the U.S. Supreme Court decisions outlawing segregation.

DeCell said he invited newspapermen from New England, Kentucky, Iowa, Pennsylvania, New Jersey, Minnesota, New York, Michigan, Illinois, Colorado, Kansas, Wisconsin, Nebraska and Ohio.

HE SAID he recently returned from the National Editorial Assn. meeting at Louisville, Ky., where he told newspapermen "we are not trying to cover up our faults but want it tempered with our good.

"Of all those people with whom I talked, not one showed adverse reaction to the situation."

He plans to attend the New England Press Assn. meeting in September.

A pamphlet, the first of many to be issued from DeCell's office, said in part:

"Admittedly, Mississippi is determined ot maintain a system of segregation which it knows to be a practical necessity. However, the scope of Mississippi's present alarm embraces the entire nation, derived from the threatening danger to each and all of the 48 states."

The pamphlet cites what it calls falsehoods printed by Time Magazine and statements of Thurgood Marshall, chief counsel of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Marshall, the pamphlet continued, told of being confronted in a Mississippi town by a white man who said ominously that the sun never sets on a Negro in that town.

But, the pamphlet said, Time Magazine refused to retract or correct the statement even though Marshall could not remember the town.

SARTOR TALKS IN TUPELO

P. 17

From The Commercial Appeal
Tupelo, Miss., Bureau

TUPELO, Miss., June 15.—A Mississippi state representative declared here Friday the fight for the preservation of segregation cannot be won on the basis of segregation alone.

Havis Sartor, state representative of Clark and Jasper Counties, said the South must have the combined help of those persons who are dissatisfied with the income tax laws and other laws which the Federal Government is using for encroachment on state and local powers.

He said America was not envisioned as a centralized government such as European countries.

"America is composed of 48 separate governments, and the Federal Government is supposed to be the overseer of the separate governments."

Mr. Sartor claimed that in a divisional government such as that existing in America, the states have the final authority.

"The United States Supreme Court is not only trying to prove that it is supreme, but is acting as a separate legislative body by trying to enforce its own laws.

"The courts of the land are for one purpose only . . . to decide the issues, and not to enforce or make laws. Courts are to explain the meanings of laws."

He called for a constitutional amendment which would limit the amount of money the Federal Government can assess its people for income taxes.

The representative declined to say what he thought should be maximum amount the Government could take as income taxes.

Mr. Sartor spoke to members of the Tupelo Kiwanis Club.

Miss. Group Denies Race Purge; Invites U. S. Probe

Defender P.10 Sat. 6-9-56 Chicago, Ill.

JACKSON, Miss. — The State Sovereignty Commission last week denied charges made by Roy Wilkins before the Senate Judiciary sub-committee on Civil Rights that economic reprisals were being made against Negroes and invited the committee to come to Mississippi to see, "First hand the evidence completely refuting Mr. Wilkins' scattergun accusations."

Wilkins testified before the committee on May 25 from an article in the Jackson, Miss., Times reporting on a meeting of circuit county clerks.

According to the story in March, 1955, Earl Crenshaw, clerk of the Montgomery County, Ala. circuit court told his colleagues of the successful methods used there to keep Negroes from "overloading" the voters registration lists.

FORCED VACATIONS

Names were obtained from the lists and Negroes who worked for members of the White Citizens Councils were told to take a vacation. In turn, they were advised that when their names were purged from the lists, their "vacations" would be over.

Crenshaw said this method had been most successful in his county and he advised the people in Mississippi to use it.

Before May, 1955, Wilkins testified, Humphreys County, Miss., had 400 registered Negro voters. By May 7, 1955, the day Rev. George Lee was murdered, there were 92.

As of Nov. 25, 1955, Gus Courts of Belzoni, Miss., a grocer, who was shot, was the only name on the list. Wilkins also cited the threat mailed to Caleb Lee, a Negro farmer who received an unsigned letter warning him that if he wanted to live he had better stop trying to vote.

Wilkins accused the state of running the gamut from economic reprisals to out-right violence against Negroes.

The telegram to Chairman Hennings of the sub-committee was signed by Hal C. DeCell of the State Sovereignty Commission and said the commission would cooperate with the committee in every way to "ascertain the facts."

Mississippian Charges Press With Taking Sides Against Segregationists

Call Mo. 6-1-56 P.1

Mon. 6-4 Kansas City, Mo.

WASHINGTON. — (ANP) — Rep. John Bell Williams (D. Miss.) last week charged the press and radio with censoring news which show advocates of segregation in a favorable light.

In a speech prepared for delivery at Salem, Ala., Friday night the Mississippi representative said that 'liberals" have become so strong in recent years that they control a great segment of the press and radio in this country.

These media of communication, he said seize upon interracial crime in the South and amplify them out of proportion to their importance. This, he continued, is done by the use of half truths, innuendo and in some cases outright lies. They try to make it look as if lynching of Negroes is a favorite Southern pasttime among the white people.

In addressing the Dallas County Citizens' Council on the second anniversary of the Supreme Court decision on school desegregation, Williams contended that educational standards have 'deteriorated" in Washington since integration.

He claimed that so much trouble had arisen in the schools that it has become necessary to assign full-time officers at some of the Washington schools.

He stated that crime is on the upgrade and white clubwomen of Washington had asked for extra police protection at night because of repeated attacks by Negro juveniles.

Williams contended that 320 of the 350 crimes committed in the District of Columbia during the last four months of 1955, were committed by Negroes.

The Mississippian denied that a "reign of terror" now exists in southern states. The lowest Negro crime rate in the United States is in Mississippi and South Carolina, he said. New York state has 7,000 Negroes in prison, he continued, while Mississippi only has 1,500.

Col. 3-4

In an attempt to justify the treatment of Negroes in the South, Williams pointed out some instances where Negroes were not given first class citzenship rights in the north.

He mentioned Dearborn, Mich., as a community where no Negroes are not permitted to live. And an Illinois congressman told him, said Williams, that there are "hundreds" of towns and cities in that state where Negroes can't spend the night.

JACKSON, Miss., May 31 — Gov. James P. Coleman, titular head of the Mississippi Democratic party, closed the doors today on Mississippians for States Rights. Those who formed the organization are no longer eligible to seek public office as Democrats, he said.

Jun. 6-1-56

About 250 persons organized the states rights movement here yesterday. They adopted a resolution declaring they had "lost confidence in both major political parties as they are now controlled from the national level.

New York, N.Y.

Governor Coleman told a news conference that the states rights group had "read themselves out of the Democratic party" by their unwillingness to wait for the Democratic state convention July 16. He said none of the states righters would be welcome at the state convention.

Mr. Coleman singled out Ross R. Barnett, a Jackson attorney, and Mrs. Mary Cain, a Summit, Miss., newspaper editor. Both were gubernatorial candidates against him last summer.

Persons declared banned from the party by Governor Coleman scoffed at his announcement. Mrs. Cain called his statement "ridiculous."

States Rights Group Calls Meeting May 30

Birm. Ala.

JACKSON, May 20 (U.P.)—Missiissippians for States Rights, a group to name a slate of presidential electors pledged to principles instead of candidates, have announced a state-wide meeting here May 30.

Circuit Judge M. M. McGowan, temporary chairman, said a permanent erganization would be set up at the meeting set for 2 p.m. at the Heidelberg. He said "a group from Alabama" will present "and plans are being laid to have a group from three or four other Southern states where plans are under way to put up unpledged electors."

If both parties come up with candidates and platforms unsuittable to the South, the group hopes to throw the election into the House of Representatives where Southerners would be able to bargain for segregation and states' rights.

McGowan said the group hopes to "set up state, county and district committees of Mississippians for State Rights whose chief function will be to make available to every voter in this state information concerning the presidential campaign as it develops."

"We positively refrain from provoking any feud or fight between Mississippians," he said. "We simply want the people to have all the information before making a choice."

State Road-E-O held here over the week-end.

Edward Lancaster of Greenville came in second in the Jaycee-sponsored contest. Lamar Warnock of Carey placed third.

Integration Fighting Agency Established In Mississippi

Daily Worker Wed. 5-16-56

Atlanta, Ga.

JACKSON, Miss. — (INS) — The state of Mississippi established a secret investigative agency Tuesday to "acquire necessary information to thwart efforts of integration."

It was not disclosed whether the secret investigators will have the power to arrest, but it was believed they would not.

The authorization for the force of secret investigators came from the newly-created State Sovereignty Commission, headed by Governor James P. Coleman.

12 MEN HIRED

The 12 man commission hired L. C. Hicks who has served for many years as chief of state police, to head the investigators. Hicks, who will receive $7200 per year for his services, will resign from the state police to take the position.

The action came only two days before the fourth anniversary of the U. S. Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation in the public schools. The National Association for the Advancement of Colored People recently announced it will make its first legal efforts at the local level by June 1 to end segregation in Mississippi's public schools.

REMAIN SECRET

Coleman was authorized by the Commission to hire as many investigators as he deemed necessary. The number will remain secret under present plans.

Attorney Hugh Clayton of New Albany, a member of the commission, said that at least one of the investigators "might be a Negro."

The commission authorized the investigators to "spend what money is necessary to acquire neceesary is necessary to acquire necessary information to thwart efforts of integration." The commission has an operating fund of $250,000 per year.

GOT THE BALL

Governor Coleman, speakeing of the announced efforts by the NAACP to end segregation, declared:

"I see no reason for alarm, frustration or futility. We've got the ball and it's up to the opposition to take the initiative." He added, "We are not a beleagured state with our backs to the wall."

Daily Worker

In another action, the commission hired Hal Decell, editor of the Deer Creek Pilot, as its publicity director at a salary of $6500 per year. His chief duty, according to the Commission, will be to "launch an information campaign designed to win friends outside the South."

The group named State Rep. Ney Gore of Marks as its fulltime executive director.

Mississippi, home of the prosegregation White Citizens Councils, has a Negro population of about 800,000, or 45 per cent of the total population.

Negro Students Being Given Buildings, Schooling Equal To That Of Whites And Riding Buses Paid By State—Teachers' Salaries Rise

By KENNETH TOLER

JACKSON, Miss., July 28.—The long-existent gap in Mississippi's segregated public school system is being rapidly closed.

And except for efforts to integrate the system, the Negro and white segregated schools will soon be on the equal basis called for in the 1890 Constitution.

Officials feel however, that the progress that has been made could be halted completely in a movement to carry out the United States Supreme Court integration decision.

That's based on the "standby" authority given the legislature by the people to abolish the whole system if integration is attempted.

Mr. Toler

That is apparently the main reason no suit has been filed in Mississippi to integrate the public schools.

Another factor is the NAACP - challenged statement that Mississippi Negroes are willing to accept voluntary segregation provided their schools are brought up to par with those of the whites without further delay.

Possibly the most benefitted group under a 1953 legislative-enacted Negro-white public school equalization program are the Negro teachers. They are feeling it in their pay-checks.

At the same time, Negro students are being given buildings and facilities equal to those of the whites, and are now riding to school in state-paid for buses.

Indicative of the adjustment in Negro school teachers salaries is a recent report by state Supt. J. M. Tubb.

In the 1945-46 session, Negro teachers averaged $398 a year. That compared to the $1,108 for whites for an overall average annual teacher salary of $840.

Negro Pay Near White's

That schedule in the 1955-56 session shows the average Negro teacher's annual salary had moved up to $2,010. The whites last session advanced to $2,609 for an overall average of $2,356.

Superintendent Tubb also disclosed the improvement in the training of Negro teachers.

In 1945-46, an estimated 1,376 Negro teachers, or 16 per cent of the state's total, had completed four-year college training. That compares with the record in the approaching 1956-57 session of holders of "A" certificates of 3,375 Negro teachers, or 49.4 per cent.

On the white side for the 1945-46 session, the white average in that category was 68.7 per cent and for the approaching session is 72 per cent of the 6,097 classroom teachers.

A sharp reduction in the number of school districts has also taken place. In the 1945-46 period, Mississippi has 4,746 school districts of all types. Last year, the number had been cut to 869, with the new consolidation program which must be completed by next July expected to reduce the number to 200.

In the 1945-46 school year, Mississippi spent $20,846,208 for public schools, or $46.96 per student, against $59,935,737 in the last year, or $135.39 per pupil.

Nearly 4,000 More Buses

There were 674 school buses in 1945-46, with few Negroes transported.

Now Mississippi has 4,600 all-steel bodied school buses driven by trained drivers which last year transported 230,167 students, of which 91,047 were Negroes.

The school buses traveled 25 million miles last year without a single fatality.

Expenditures in buildings from 1947 to 1953 totaled 75 million dollars, mostly local funds. Most of the funds were spent in improving Negro schools, and according to Superintendent Tubb, "went a long way" in reducing the $117,000,000 disparity between the two systems.

Under the new Negro-white equalization program, the Legislature has authorized unlimited expenditures, the only proviso being that at no time shall the outstanding bonds exceed 60 million dollars.

"It won't be very long before every child, white and Negro, will have the same facilities and opportunities," Superintendent Tubb said. "We hope nothing will be done to stop the wonderful progress Mississippi has made or to effect the harmonious race relations existent in Mississippi."

Writer Says Steps Taken To "Deodorize" Mississippi

Mobile Ala. Sat. 7-7 P. 3

BY LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C. — (NNPA) — Efforts were made Monday to deodorize the State of Mississippi, but after a hearing lasting nearly three hours on civil rights the State was as stinky as ever.

Attorney General Joe G. Patterson of Mississippi, with the aid of Robert B. Young, a member of the professional staff of the Senate Judiciary Committee, sought to do the deordorizing by giving the State a bath of innocence in the brutal murder of Emmett Louis Till and in the conduct of other criminal cases in which colored men are the defendants.

In the end, Patterson's testimony and the self-serving declarations of Senator James Eastland, Dixiecrat, of Mississippi, committee chairman, left unchallenged the state of violence in which colored people live in that state.

Patterson was the third Attorney General of Southern states to appear before the Senate Judiciary Committee and testify against the four-point civil rights program of the Eisenhower Administration.

In a prepared statement he read he charged that the Administration's civil rights program is aimed at one section of the country.

The record fails to show, he said, that Mississippi whites have ignored the civil rights of colored people.

Charges of economic pressure being exerted againts colored people are absurd, he said, pointing out that there are prosperous colored business and professional men and farmers.

The Mississippi Supreme Court, he declared, has guarded the rights of its citizens regardless of race going before the crusaders came upon the scene.

of our land. The weight of evidence

To prove this he cited a number of decisions of the Mississippi Supreme Court, including the Willie McGhee case, showing that unfair convictions have been reversed.

The civil rights legislation proposed by Attorney General Herbert Brownell, Jr., will serve no good purpose, Patterson declared. The "same well-organized, radical groups" that caused introduction of the legislation, he said, will be just as "militant" in demanding that they be permitted to make policy and administer the proposed bipartisan civil rights commission and the proposed civil rights divison in the Justice Department.

Eastland charged that Mr. Brownell is attempting to divide the people of the country in a "very crucial period.' He said the Attorney General could better use his time trying to "correct the pro-Communist decisions of the present Supreme Court." He added that he had never had "adequate cooperation" from Mr. Brownell in helping to rid the country of subversives.

Senator William Langer, Republican, of North Dakota, brought up the Till case. He said he had received a great many letters concerning it and asked Patterson to tell him about the case.

The Till case was actually the third and most outrageous murder of colored persons in Mississippi in 1955. Till, a 14-year-old boy, was brutally slain and tossed into the Tallahatchie River near Greenwood, Miss.

Negroes by Thousands Are Leaving Mississippi

Times Picayune P. 34 New Orleans, La. Mon. 8-27-56

Exodus Is Comparable to Flight of 'Okies'

JACKSON, Miss., Aug. 25 (AP) — Negroes by the thousands are leaving Mississippi, by fable and song their traditional home.

The exodus is comparable to the strange flight of the "Okies" from Oklahoma during the depression, or the mass movement from farm to city during World War II.

The motives are, partly, the same: The hope for a bigger paycheck in a faraway land of promise, the urge for such things as a refrigerator and a gas stove, a house you can look at and like.

Also a factor are the machines, the dust-stirring monsters which now strip more cotton from the long rows in an hour than a dozen persons can pick together.

Cotton picking and cotton chopping no longer is assurance of enough pay to re-establish your credit for another year at the corner grocery.

It can't be denied that a wish to "have their rights" is spurring many Negroes to leave the land their forebears—many as slaves—grew to cherish.

Over the radio and in their newspapers, they hear of "the North" as a land where a Negro votes all the time, where Negro children share the best schools with whites, where a man's color doesn't bar him from what he could otherwise have.

Mississippi claims she hasn't "given an inch" in maintaining traditional segregation of the races. No Negro has been admitted to a white school, at any level. Despite a federal edict, railroad and bus waiting rooms still are segregated.

Few Mississippi Negroes vote. To take part in the Democratic primaries—the only elections that matter—they can be required to interpret sections of the state constitution in writing.

They also can be required to swear support of a declaration of party principles. This means they would have to pledge themselves, among other things, against integration and "federal encroachment" on states rights.

Fewer than 8,000 of Mississippi's 900,000 Negroes pay their poll taxes. Fewer than 8,000 actually vote. Gov. J. P. Coleman said recently the Mississippi Negro "is wholly unprepared to assume this responsibility" (of voting) and he doesn't favor the Negro voting.

Meanwhile Mississippi is spending a great deal of money in a "crash" program to make Negro schools and Negro teachers' salaries equal to that of the whites. It's part of the state's response to the U.S. Supreme Court integration ruling. Another part— The Legislature has stand-by authority to abolish public schools.

In the fertile, 18-county Delta, where the Negro population is concentrated and where alluvial soil from the Mississippi river makes cotton grow like magic, plantations are being mechanized.

Much of the Negro migration is from the Delta. But not all of it.

Dr. Robert C. Weems Jr., former dean of the school of business and industry at Mississippi State College, reported that Negroes are leaving Mississippi at the rate of 40,000 to 50,000 a year.

Dr. Weems said that in 1940 Mississippi was about half Negro and half white. In 1950 the proportion dropped to 45 per cent Negro and in 1952 to 42 per cent Negro.

If the trend continues, Dr. Weems said, there will be only one Negro to two whites in Mississippi by 1966.

He said this migration may ease the state's most obvious social problem. But he said "it would be very difficult to point to it as an economic asset."

With employment over the nation at record levels, many Negroes in the Delta are without work.

The Jackson Advocate, a Negro newspaper with statewide circulation, says:

"It is estimated that some 200,000 Delta Negro farm workers are now only able to look forward to about four months work in the year hoeing cotton."

Mechanication and use of chemicals, the Advocate said, may in the next five years "reduce drastically, if not altogether, the need for the hoe hand in the production of cotton."

"A major social as well as economic problem," said the Advocate, is "what will become of this estimated 200,000 Negro workers no longer able to obtain the meager livelihood of four months work as hoe hands."

The over-supply of labor is not attracting new industries. Of 46 new plants located in Mississippi in the first half of 1956, only five chose the Delta. The Advocate says the Negro Delta farm worker is not qualified as an industrial worker, "primarily due to his long induced habits as a cotton plantation worker."

Given "the proper opportunity for training," said the Negro newspaper, he could become "as good an industrial worker as can be found anywhere else in the nation."

MISSISSIPPI

Dr. Howard Gives 3-Point Program To Alpha Confab

Defender Sat. 1-14-56 p.3

Chicago, Ill.

By GEORGE DANIELS

From behind the "cotton curtain" of the Mississippi Delta last week came Dr. Theodore R. (for Roosevelt) Mason Howard, to accept the Alpha Phi Alpha fraternity's award of merit for his activities "in behalf of democracy."

Rated as Mississippi's "most hated" Negro leader because of his refusal to buckle under pressure applied by anti-desegregationists, Dr. Howard is described "as a man who lets the chips fal where they may."

Before some 2,500 persons who packed the Trianon ballroom during the 41st annual convention of the fraternity, the chips fell when Dr. Howard:

1. Urged Negro leaders throughout the country to gather and organize a financial fight against Mississippi terrorism and economic pressure.

2. Lambasted Negro ministers for preaching of milk and honey and the golden slippers, instead of illustrating ways and means toward obtaining food, clothing and shelter.

3. Urged a shift of emphasis on education — to restudy the theory of education to meet an integrated society.

GINS WON'T GIN

"We do not have a single organization," Dr. Howard said, "that can gear its program to fighting the brand of economic pressure now being placed on us in Mississippi.

"They're pushing us out of business, dollar by dollar. They're foreclosing on our homes and businesses. We can't get our cotton ginned and banks refuse to grant loans."

Dr. Howard, whose family has fled the state in fear of their lives, urged Negro leaders across the country to unite and form an organization to combat what he terms "a financial crisis brought on by the May 17, 1954, Supreme Court decision" which declared public school segregation unconstitutional.

"We must meet economic pressure with economic pressure," Dr. Howard said. "And in Mississippi, we're doing the best we can: we didn't buy toys or cotton goods for Christmas. The stores owned by white anti-Negro merchants are still stocked tight. We have now started the greatest mail order campaign in the history of the state."

Dr. Howard described the rising of white citizens councils — groups dedicated to maintaining segregation — as an attempt to reduce the Negro to a homeless, wandering race. "Of course, they (the whites) will let us alone," he stated, "If we remove our names from the voters' lists and resign from such anti-discrimination organizations as the NAACP"

HITS AT CHURCH

In his 12-page speech Dr. Howard did what many young men hope to do, and what many old men wished they had done: take a hefty swing at Negro Christians, letting the chips fly helter skelter.

He challenged the Negro church of America to a new crusade. "The Negro minister must tell his congregations that there is something to do while waiting for his wings."

"The average Negro Christian," Dr. Howard declared, "has less faith than anyone in the world, but he does more preaching, groaning and moaning. You cannot live in Chicago and board in Heaven."

Dr. Howard urged ministers to talk more of wages and ways and means to a better life, than the Golden Slippers, the Mansion in the Sky and the Land of Milk and Honey."

Dr. Howard further urged a shift of emphasis on Negro education. "We need to encourage young people to become scientists, technicians, engineers, and teach them to exploit their talents and to gamble on occupations other than those we consider secure and proven, as medicine, law and education."

Dr. Howard said Mississippi whites believe they can maintain segregation for at least another 10 years without federal intervention. During that period, he said, they hope to drive 500,000 Negroes out of the state.

"But if we could get our hands on the so-called unrestricted ballot, there would be some changes."

6,000 FLEE DEATH

Mississippi has about 1,230,000 whites, as compared with 986,000 Negroes. But Negroes outnumber whites 2 and 3 to 1 in nearly 85 percent of the counties. Fewer than 19,000 Negroes vote.

Since the acquittal of J. W. Milam and Roy Bryant in the Emmett Till lynch case in Money, Miss., some 6,000 Negroes have fled the state. According to Dr. Howard 82 per cent of them bought one way tickets to Chicago and Gary.

"How can President Eisenhower and Secretary of State Dulles, talk about free elections in Germany," Dr. Howard emphasized, "when in Mississippi:

". . .there is no free election.

". . .the state seeks to give power to local police officials to arrest any FBI agent who attempts to arrest or interfere with a white person who harms a Negro.

". . . Negro farmers, who raised the best cotton crop in the history of the Delta, cannot get their money.

" . . . Negroes are shotgunned, lynched and threatened, etc., Rev. George Lee in Belzoni, Lamar Smith in Brookhaven, Emmett Till in Money and Gus Courts in Belzoni.

"Our theory of American democracy is the greatest philosophy of government in the world, but Mississippi is in open rebellion against the Federal Government and the laws of our land."

Dr. Howard, whose wife and children are in California, said he was returning to Mississippi. "I don't know how long I'll stay there, but I will stay as long as I can because I believe in what I am doing."

"Few of us in this generation," he said, "have paid a price for our civil liberties. But that time has passed; we (the Negro) will now have to take up or own banner and sacrifice for that in which we justly believe."

Dr. Howard is founder and director of the 2,500-member Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, with headquarters in Mound Bayou. He also directs the Friendship Medical Center there, and is one of the directors of the Tri-State bank in Memphis, Tenn., where funds (about $286,000) have been deposited to aid Negro farmers and businessmen in Mississippi.

MISSISSIPPI TO DEFY U.S. RACIAL RULING

Cities Plan To Keep Waiting Room Segregation

Memphis, Tenn.

TO IGNORE ICC ORDER

By The Associated Press

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 9.—Officials of several Mississippi towns said Monday their railroad and bus stations will remain segregated despite a Federal agency ruling against segregating interstate passengers.

Jackson police put up segregation signs in the railroad station and a bus station Monday to enforce Mississippi's segregation laws.

Will Be Policed

Policemen will be stationed at the Illinois Central Railroad depot to enforce the city's stand if they are needed, Police Chief W. D. Rayfield said.

Some other Mississippi city officials said they would take similar action if necessary.

The Interstate Commerce Commission ordered an end to segregated waiting rooms for interstate passengers — those traveling between states. The order goes into effect Tuesday. It does not apply to passengers traveling only within Mississippi.

The Jackson order against integration will appy to all passengers, whether interstate or intrastate.

Illinois Central workers in Jackson scraped away and painted over "colored" and "white" signs Monday on waiting rooms and rest rooms.

City police put up their own—large white signs with black letters, attached to heavy metal stands. The sings read:

"Waiting Room, White Only," or "Waiting Room, Colored Only." They are signed "By Order Police Department."

Declines Comment

Tom Casey, superintendent of the Louisiana Division of Illinois Central, declined comment. "There's been too much said already."

It may boil down to the question—does the state or the ICC have jurisdiction over the stations?

Police placed identical signs at the Continental Trailways Bus Station.

They Greyhound Bus Station still had its usual segregation signs and a company official said they would remain unless orders came down from a higher office.

The Jackson Municipal Airport has only one small waiting room and Negroes and whites always have shared it.

Negroes in the Jackson railroad and bus stations segregated themselves Monday as usual.

In Laurel, Mayor A. S. Scott said train and bus stations will remain segregated. If the segregation signs are taken down, the city will put up new ones, he said.

Signs remained up in Gulfport, as they did in Greenwood where Mayor Allen Saffold said "segregation will definitely remain."

In Hattiesburg, Southern Railways put up a sign reading "Colored Waiting Room for Intrastate Passengers." That apparently allowed Negro passengers traveling across state lines to use it or the white waiting room.

Several Mississippi legislators have indicated a bill will be introduced this week to spell out state authority over waiting rooms, and providing penalties.

Asst. Atty. Gen. Joe Patterson said it already is a misdemeanor to violate the state's segregation laws, punishable by fines of $100 to $1,000.

'NO MIDDLE-GROUND' OVER SEGREGATION

Mississippi Leader Warns Against Integration

Memphis, Tenn.

WORLD ISSUES CITED

Sun. 1-10-55

Special to The Commercial Appeal

KOSCIUSKO, Miss., Jan. 9.—Secretary of State Heber Ladner asserted here Monday that there is no middle-ground in the fight to preserve racial segregation—"You are either an integrationist or you are a segregationist."

"The clock has struck, the hour is here, when every citizen of the United States must take his or her place in the battle line—either on one side or the other," the state official said in an address before the Rotary Club.

Warning Is Given

"If we are to perpetuate our great civilization, we must wake from our slothful slumber," Mr. Ladner said. "We must at all costs prevent the amalgamation of the races."

He said "to integrate the races, as now being proposed by the Federal authorities, will within a few generations result in both the black and white races losing their identity.

"And," he added, "with it our superiority in the councils of the world will be lost forever."

Attacking President Eisenhower's proposed civil rights investigating commission, the Mississippi official said its purpose "is to control and regulate the though and action of a sovereign people."

Strife Is Predicted

"This can only result in strife and chaos, which is contrary to one of the cardinal purposes for which the constitution of the United States was adopted—to insure domestic tranquility," Mr. Ladner said. "As we face today the greatest problem that has ever confronted this nation—that of preserving the integrity of the blood streams of both the white and black races—let us remember that history repeats itself.

"Every nation that has heretofore promoted the integration of the races has been relegated to a position of dependency," he said.

Mr. Ladner said integration "in effect means the mongrelization of the races several generations hence," while segregation "will insure the purity of the blood streams of our citizens and guarantee the perpetuity of the greatest nation in the world."

Howard calls 'democracy' in Mississippi 'mockery'

Afro-American 1-17
Baltimore, Md.

BATON ROUGE, La. (ANP) —Dr. T. R. M. Howard told an Emancipation Day anniversary gathering last week that Mississippi whites are conducting a campaign of violence and economic reprisal aimed at driving out a half million colored citizens in the next 10 years.

The Mound Bayou, Miss., physician told 1,000 listeners that Mississippi's congressional delegation should be challenged because a "Mockery of democracy exists in the state."

HE SAID WHITE leaders told him that they felt they could stall off school integration and unlimited colored voting for 10 years before the Federal Government moved in to force it.

"They knew that once the colored citizen gets the unrestricted ballot in his hands there will be some changes made in Mississippi," he said, adding that in spite of the problem in Mississppi, "the Federal Government has done nothing to help."

"The FBI can pick up pieces of a fallen airplane on the slopes of Colorado and find the man who caused the crash," he added, "but they can't find a white man when he kills a colored person in the South."

Integration Foes Await Coleman's Policy, Plans

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 14—Mississippi inaugurates her 51st governor Tuesday in the midst of an all-out effort to preserve racial segregation on all levels.

The man who assumes that office has been serving as attorney general, and as the state's top legal authority has insisted segregation will be maintained without resort to violence or unnecessary "hysteria."

Sun. 1-15-56

However, as James Plemon Coleman takes over the reins of state government strong pro-segregation groups wait anxiously for disclosure of the approach he will take to carrying out his position in view of his campaign last summer. Not once during his campaign did the retiring attorney general use the word "Negro" in his stump speeches.

Also, Gov.-elect Coleman differs sharply with Sen. James O. Eastland (D. Miss.) and two other officials who admit membership in the White Citizens Councils "dedicated to preservation of segregation." That difference is on steps that should be taken by the state in keeping the races from mixing in the public schools and elsewhere.

Atlanta

Mr. Coleman has branded a proposed "nullification" move by Sen. Eastland as "legal poppycock" and "foolish." That course had been suggested for legislative consideration by the senator, along with Rep. John Bell Williams (D. Miss.), and Circuit Judge T. P. Brady of Brookhaven, an official in the state association of Citizens Councils.

In a move to offset indications of a "break" among top officials on the segregation question, Sen. John C. Stennis (D. Miss.) close friend of the new governor, has suggested a "softer" approach. Sen. Stennis has suggested that "voiding" would be less offensive.

Mr. Coleman said whatever move is made should be in seeking a constitutional convention through petition to the Congress on the question of safeguarding the sovereignty of the states in handling school and similar problems on that level. He came out for that approach after it was suggested by former Gov. Fielding L. Wright, 1948 states rights candidate for vice president of the United States.

MISSISSIPPI

Another situation keeping the pro-segregationists watchful of Mr. Coleman's disclosures in his Tuesday's inaugural message is his somewhat "cool" attitude towards the Citizens Councils.

The governor-elect has said his message will be "heard from the Pacific to the Atlantic." Other than that, he has given on indication of its contents.

He can be expected, however, to take a calmer approach to the issue than has been the course with other officials.

Instead of coming out "slugging," he may take a somewhat conciliatory, yet stern attitude insofar as segregation is concerned. At least, he is expected to offer a helping hand to Negroes who have expressed themselves as being willing to continue the segregation status, provided their facilities and opportunities are equalized.

Mr. Coleman feels that a student assignment law, based on public health, morals and community welfare, is Mississippi's presently No. 1 bar to integration. He also comforts the situation with the assertion that as yet no integration suits have been filed in Mississippi.

The new governor can be expected to outline the progress made by Mississippi Negroes in offsetting outside propaganda that things are otherwise. He may also give the outsiders something to think about in revealing conditions in their states among Negroes as contrasted to those in Mississippi.

Because of the large number of legislators who are members also of the Citizens Councils, Mr. Coleman will likely be careful not to antagonize them just as he begins his term.

Chicago Ministers Help Mississippi Squeeze Victims

Atlanta, Ga.

CLEVELAND, Miss. — (ANP) — Amzie Moore, 43-year-old businessman who complain-he is threatened by an economic boycott, has receive a $1,500 check from a group of Chicago ministers.

Moore announced recently that he would have to close his combination, gasoline station, cafe and beauty shop near here unless he recieved assistance in paying off some of his bills. He had been refused credit because of his activity in behalf of Negroes at Cleveland.

The Christian Protective Association, composed mostly of Chicago Negro church leaders, was organized six months ago to aid "economic squeeze" vitims in the south.

The gift to Moore was raised a week ago Sunday in the churches of the ministers who are members of the association.

The Rev. Montgomery G. Ward, president of the group, said Moore is a supporter of desegregation in the schools and has been active in urging Negroes to vote in Miss.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 17 (UP)—Gov. James Plemon Coleman promised today to give Mississippi four years of sound government and segregation without a "daily uproar of confusion and uncertainty."

The 42-year-old former farm boy from Choctaw County held a steady hand to a cold clear sky after his inauguration as Mississippi's 51st governor and said:

"I have not the slightest fear that four years hence when my successor stands on this same spot to assume his official oath, the separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will still be in full force and effect in exactly the same manner and form as we know it today."

Coleman said Mississippi is now prepared to maintain separation of the races on all levels "without keeping our state, its economy, its customs, and its practices in a daily uproar of confusion and uncertainty."

He pledged the "full weight" of the state government would be used to keep Mississippi a "state of law and not of violence."

Both Houses Adopt Resolution Saying Court Has Exceeded Its Powers In Rulings On Integration

Memphis, Tenn.

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Feb. 29.—The Mississippi Legislature voted unanimously Wednesday to interpose the state's sovereignty against enforceemnt of the Supreme Court integration decisions on grounds they are "unconstitutional, invalid and of no lawful effect within the confines of the state."

Asserting the court has usurped powers reserved by the state in the administration of its schools, the Legislature declared it will take "all appropriate measures honorably and constitutionally available to us to void this illegal encroachment upon our rights."

Gov. J. P. Coleman had endorsed the resolution of interposition which makes Mississippi the fifth state to take steps to block enforcement of the desegregation decisions. Others are Alabama, Georgia, South Carolina and Virginia.

Mississippi's resolution invites "our sister states to take prompt and deliberate action to check further encroachment by the Federal Government, through judicial legislation, upon the reserved powers of all states."

Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin, speaking for Senate adoption of the proposal offered by Chairman Earl Evans Jr. of a joint committee which drafted it, said, "We are not willing to sit idly by and see rights reserved unto us trampled under foot and taken away by the Supreme Court.

"By all honorable and legal methods, we are going to wage a great fight to keep our traditions."

'Chip By Chip'

House Speaker Walter Sillers, who spoke for the measure in that branch, said, "Chip by chip our constitutional rights are being whittled away and unless we assert ourselves the states will become vassals of the Federal Government.

"We will then have a dictatorship. This is not a defiance of constitutional authority, but a protest to excessive use of powers granted the Federal Government."

Representative Joel Blass of Stone County said the resolution "is a rational and legally sound step."

"The question is the continued existence of the union of states," he said. "Nowhere does the resolution say that the decision is not in effect—but it does say that it has no lawful effect."

Representative Joe Wroten of Washington County sought to add a statement that "we respectfully reject the doctrine of nullification" in the resolution, but he was voted down, 123 to 7. He supported the resolution after losing his amendment to clarify statements by "some who hold interposition and nullification to be synonymous."

Senator Hayden Campbell of Jackson, who headed a subcommittee which drafted the resolution, said "implementing" legislation is expected to be offered later. It was explained that was needed to back up the resolution.

The resolution was adopted in the Senate during the morning, and then rushed to the House where it was substituted by Representative George Payne Cossar of Tallahatchie County for an identical House proposal.

Sing 'Dixie'

After Speaker Sillers had spoken on the resolution, five members stood up and sang "Dixie." In the group were Representatives Bob Cooper of Monroe County, Odie Trenor of Chickasaw County, Bill Jolly of Lowndes County, Bob Scott of Franklin County and James Vardaman Webb of Winston County.

The resolution states the court is not a party to the compact of states, but a creature of it, and that the question of contested power must be settled by the states.

It asks Congress to submit the question of state sovereignty to the states in an amendment spelling out the school issue. It does not ask for a constitutional convention, because, Speaker Sillers said, it would be controlled by Congress and delegates based on legislative representation which would jeopardize the position of the Southern States.

'Segregation Tax' Urged

JACKSON, Miss. — (AP) — Churches and their societies and private organizations operating on a nonsegregated basis would lose their property tax exemptions under a proposed bill in the Mississippi Senate.

Sen. George Yarbrough introduced the bill Tuesday. It was referred Wednesday to the Senate Finance Committee.

Under present law, churches and religious organizations are exempt from property taxes.

Public Dissention Poses Test on Segregation Plan

New Orleans La.

By W. F. MINOR
(Times-Picayune Staff Correspondent)

JACKSON, Miss. — Mississippi is facing a critical test of the doctrine of "separate but equal" facilities for the Negro and white races—a doctrine which the state has condemned the US supreme court for abandoning.

By resolution of interposition and other declarations, the state has charged that the supreme court exceeded its authority and violated all precedents when it ruled that segregated public schools violated the federal constitution.

Until the court ruled in May, 1954 that segregation was illegal, it had relied on the 1896 ruling that separate facilities for the races, as long as they were equal, were constitutional.

Glaring Inequality

Mississippi had never acted by law to create "equal" facilities within its segregated school system until it tackled the problem in 1953.

When it did take up the problem, the Legislature had before it the evidence its own investigations had turned up—that glaring inequalities existed between the Negro and white school systems.

The highest state authorities, with then Gov. Hugh White in the forefront, admitted that the state had a moral and legal duty to wipe out the discrimination of the past and equalize the school systems.

In spelling out the program of equalization, the Legislature produced the broadest program of reorganization and consolidation of schools the state has ever attempted.

Lawmakers admitted that without a sweeping, streamlining process, with final authority at the state level, the cost of a dual system could not be afforded.

Passions Cooling

After two years of preliminary work, the program is beginning to pick up momentum, as the July 1, 1957 date for reorganization of all school districts under direction of the state educational finance commission draws closer.

But with each consolidation, the people in many parts of the state apparently don't like it. At least, that's what their representatives in the Legislature have been saying.

Repeatedly in the current session of the Legislature lawmakers have attacked the program on the floor or made attempts to veto some of its operation.

One legislator drew a thunder of applause when she said, "It's about time we started worrying about our white children and not so much about the Negro children."

A large bloc of the Legislature has organized to pass legislation postponing the deadline for reorganizations anywhere from one to 10 years.

Dissention Alarm

So far, the education committees in both the House and Senate have rejected such bills.

Gov. J. P. Coleman, a firm believer in the present school equalization plan, has made it known that he would stand in the way of any measure to cripple the program or prevent its operation.

But last week, both Coleman and the commission obviously were concerned over the dissention surrounding the program.

They huddled for several hours and later produced a statement declaring that the commission would consider no further reorganizations of any school districts until public meetings were held locally giving the people full details.

This was calculated to take some of the "curse" off the state commission which has been pictured by some opponents as a heartless dictator.

The commission and Coleman reminded the people that they had chosen to pay the price in order to keep segregation.

AN ECONOMIC LYNCHING

Here Is How The South Breaks The Back Of An 'Uppity N----r

Defender P. 8 Sat. 3-31-56 Chicago, Ill.

By LLOYD GENERAL

The brother of the top NAACP official in Mississippi was in Chicago this week, an unemployed fugitive from a three-year campaign of harassment that destroyed his $25,000 business and left him more than $500 in debt. He was the victim of an economic lynching.

He is 33-year-old James Charles Evers, who arrived in Chicago Sunday from Philadelphia, Miss. His brother is Medger Evers, Mississippi field secretary for the NAACP.

Three years ago, Evers was a prosperous young businessman. He owned an undertaking establishment, a hotel, two cafes and the town's only taxi line for Negroes.

Now, all that is gone—because he dared urge Negroes in Mississippi to register and vote. Under mounting pressure, Evers was forced to flee Mississippi with his wife and three small girls.

They have moved into a flat at 1851 S. Hamlin with his sister, Mrs. Elizabeth Jordan, and their mother, Mrs. Jessis Evers.

Ever's story is an all-familiar tale of what happens to Negroes in Mississippi who try to exercise their rights of citizenship.

The trouble began when Evers, a disc jockey on radio station WHOC in Philadelphia urged other Negroes to vote. To set an example, he tried three times to register.

At first, he was told by the clerk, Burdett Richardson, that he would have to recite the U.S. Constitution. Unable to perform this task, Evers gave interpretations of four amendments.

Richardson was still unsatisfied. He demanded that Evers recite verbatim the first ten amendments to the Constitution. Unable to comply, Evers was still undaunted. He went home and returned within the week, ready to recite the amendments.

But he never got a chance to put his new-found knowledge to use. He related the words of Richardson:

"I hear you have been saying some damn smart talk about me. Now get out before I. . ."

Evers left, but his troubles were not over. In fact, they had just begun.

First, his taxi licenses were revoked; then the lease on his cafeteria was cancelled. Advertisers began to boycott station WHOC, his sponsors were forced to drop the show and finally Evers quit.

There was more. Guests in Evers hotel were warned that the building might be blown up. Negroes who were members of his burial insurance plan were told to quit or lose their jobs.

Then came the final blows. One day Mrs Evers was driving one of her husband's hearses when it was struck from the side by a car driven by a white man, who quickly admitted being at fault.

The matter would have ended there, but for pressure brought to bear on the white man to file suit against Evers. The result was a $500 judgement against Mrs. Evers.

There was another accident in which Evers' car was struck by another vehicle driven by a white woman. When the chief of police arrived on the scene, the woman said Evers' car was standing still when it was struck.

But the chief—and the town's mayor—would have none of such confessions. They publicly stated that this was an opportunity for which they had been waiting more than three years.

The upshot of it all was that Evers was fined $84 for "reckless driving." And the mayor declared—for good measure— that no Negro in Mississippi was fit to vote.

Evers tells of his futile attempts to borrow $4,000 to save his business, which were valued at more than $25,000. He tells also of filing a complaint with the FBI, informing them that Mississippi's Fifth Congressional District has no Negro voters.

And he relates sadly how the FBI conducted an investigation, and declared there was "not enough evidence "to warrant action. The NAACP has also been unable to get action in the case.

In Chicago, James Charles Evers said this week that he wants to forget the nightmare he has lived through.

"All I want is a job—any kind of job," said the graduate of Alcorn A and M College.

He is being helped by the Rev. A. Lincoln James, pastor of the Greater Bethesda Baptist church, who hopes to find Evers a job with a Chicago undertaking establishment.

"But," said Rev. James, "if anyone knows where Evers can find employment, they can contact me or the Defender or call Evers at ROckwell 2-5804."

Mississippi Budget In Test As Cities Try To Get Taxes Earmarked For Them — Sillers, Winter In Contest

P. 2

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 2.—Legislators arriving in advance of Tuesday's convening of the 1956 General Assembly held varied opinions Monday on the length of the biennial session which faces many major issues, topped by the one to preserve racial segregation in Mississippi.

Gov.-elect J. P. Coleman, who doesn't take office until Jan. 17, has expressed the hope the legislators' work can be completed around March 1.

Memphis

However, those who will have to deal directly with the issues on the House and Senate floors were not as optimistic.

Jenn.

Representative-elect Barron Drewry of Alcorn County, a newcomer, said he believes the work can be completed in 60 days, while Representative Tom Dunlap, starting his third term from Chickasaw County, is less optimistic.

Boren Has Plan

Senator-elect Hugh Boren of Tupelo is ready to give early adjournment a shot in the arm with a resolution urging immediate consideration be given to appropriation and revenue bills. Usually, those issues are left for the last days of a session.

In support of his proposal, Senator-elect Boren, a former member of the Legislature, said. "The citizenry looks to this Legislature for immediate enactment of legislation effectuating an overall balanced budget commensurate with our various needs and sources of income."

The new budget for the two-year period commencing July 1 has been submitted to the legislators. It calls for 183 million dollars. Revenue to balance that budget, along with use of a 10-million-dollar surplus, has been suggested.

OK Budget Proposal

Governor-elect Coleman, as well as outgoing Gov. Hugh White, have approved the suggested budget which calls for reenactment of a 14 per cent surtax on big business, slated for automatic repeal June 30, and an increase in insurance premium taxes.

The budget, however faces a test in an effort of the 265 municipalities to have the premium taxes earmarked for them, along with opposition of the County Supervisors Association to a five-million-dollar "ceiling" on general funds for the state aid rural road program. Both of those items are calculated in the "tightly" balanced budget for state use.

On the segregation issue, bills have already been approved by the 1954 Legal Educational Advisory Committee designed to strengthen Mississippi's position in anticipated integration efforts.

Unlike the Senate where there is no organization issue, the House of Representatives opens with a contest for the speakership, as well as clerk.

Incubent Speaker Walter Sillers of Bolivar County, seeking his fourth term as presiding officer, is opposed by Representative William Winter of Grenada County. Both are optimistic.

Caucuses were held Monday night by Sillers and Winter forces, with both still insisting on enough votes to win in Tuesday's voting.

Commercial

Mr. Sillers, member of the House since 1916, is counting in excess of 94 of the 140 votes, while Mr. Winter, entering his third term, claims more than 60 in his camp. With two seats vacant by recent deaths, the voting strength is 138, with 70 needed to win.

Appeal

Incumbent Clerk Roman Kelly of Tupelo is opposed by Hal Rhyne of Jackson and Durant. That race is not expected to be as close as the speakership.

Lt. Gov. Carroll Gartin's reelection last summer settled the presidency of the Senate. Unopposed for president pro tem is Senator Earl Evans Jr. of Canton, retiring chairman of the Finance Committee.

Mrs. Halla May Pattison, first woman to hold the office as secretary of the Senate, is likewise unopposed.

P. 4

Ladner To Open House

Secretary of State Heber Ladner will convene the House and give the members their oaths. A temporary speaker will then be elected, and nominations opened for the permanent presiding officer.

Representative Blaine Eaton of Smith County is slated to nominate Mr. Sillers, with Representative-elect Milton Grisham of Prentiss County handling those honors for Mr. Winter.

A delay may result in adoption of rules in both branches, as changes have been suggested by some members. It is customary for former rules to be adopted for temporary use before being made permanent.

Governor White is scheduled to deliver his farewell message to a joint session of the House and Senate Wednesday.

Senate committee assignments are expected to be ready for announcement earlier than those in the House due to the speakership contest.

It usually takes two weeks for the committees to be lined up, with the members more or less marking time until the new Governor is inaugurated two weeks after they take office.

Urged To Start Work

However, Governor-elect Coleman has urged the members to get down to business and complete as much of the work as possible before he takes office.

He has been assured of support by a majority of the members, including the two candidates for speaker, for his program which is headlined with a proposal for recall of county officials who refuse to enforce the laws.

Likewise, the new Governor has been assured of sufficient votes to gain enactment of his proposal to expand state level regulation of public utilities to include natural gas and electric power companies.

Among the early arrivals were Representative-elect John Anderson and Representative-elect Murry Duncan, both of Pontotoc County, Representattive-elect Fred Cocke of Coahoma, Representative-elect Bob Cooper of Monroe County, Representative-elect Luther Adams of Lee County, Representative-elect Bill Coon of Wilkinson County, Representative-elect Odie Trenor of Chickasaw County, Representative-elect L. L. Brody of DeSoto County, and Representative Dexter Lee of Alcorn County.

Segregation, Finances, Law Enforcement Top Issues for New Administration

Special to The New York Times.

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 2—The new Legislature will swing into action tomorrow as a new state administration faces major problems.

P. 22-C

Segregation, law enforcement, finances and regulation of public utilities loom as top matters for consideration by the 189 legislators, 60 per cent of whom are newcomers.

New York

Despite the abundance of controversy, J. P. Coleman, who takes office as Governor Jan. 17, expects to push through his program with ease.

N. Y.

Mr. Coleman, an unpredictable political figure, shattered precedent last summer by winning the governorship on his first try. He has made it clear that he intends to be in command on Legislature matters.

Mississippi has been noted for legislative independence, and political observers are interested in seeing how closely the Legislature goes along with the 41-year-old Governor-elect, a former "country plow boy."

Fight for Speaker's Post

Mr. Coleman has kept a "hands off" policy in the fight for the powerful post of House Speaker, which will be decided on opening day. Walter Sillers of Rosedale, the Speaker for twelve of his forty years' legislative service, is opposed by 32-year-old William Winter of Grenada County. Mr. Winter has had eight years in the House. Both have assured the Governor of their cooperation.

Lieut. Gov. Carroll Garten, who was re-elected overwhelmingly, will preside over the forty-nine-member Senate. Earl Evans Jr. of Canton, former chairman of the Finance Committee is unopposed as president pro tempore of the Senate, the state's third highest political office.

Hugh White, the outgoing Governor, will address a joint session of the Legislature Wednesday. He is expected to summarize the accomplishments of the last four years, which have been marked by vast industrial expansion.

Mr. Coleman has advised legislative leaders to hold off on the segregation problem until he assumes office. His program is expected to run into problems growing out of the desegregation ruling of the United States Supreme Court. This segregation-conscious state has a population of 2,000,000, half of which is Negro.

Mr. Coleman will outline his course of action on segregation in a message Jan. 17.

The State's proposad budget of $183,000,000 for the next two years is $20,000,000 more than the expected income from taxes. The Legislature will grapple with a request for new revenue by the Budget Commission.

Mr. Coleman has stated his determination to force the removal of any public official who fails to abide by his duties in local law enforcement.

DRIVE IN MISSISSIPPI ON NEGROES FEARED

Times

BATON ROUGE, La., Jan. 1 (UP)—Dr. T. R. M. Howard, Negro civil rights champion, told an Emancipation Day anniversary gathering Sunday that pro-white citizens councils aim to drive a half-million Negroes from Mississippi within ten years.

Tues. 1-3-56

Mr. Howard, from the all-Negro city of Mound Bayou, Miss., told his audience of more than 1,000 persons that Mississippi's Congressional delegation should be challenged because a "mockery of democracy exists in the state."

New York

He said that in spite of the Negroes' problems in Mississippi, "the Federal Government has done nothing to help."

N. Y.

"The F. B. I. can pick up pieces of a fallen airplane on the slopes of Colorado and find the man who caused the crash," Mr. Howard said, "but they can't find a white man when he kills a Negro in the South."

The Mound Bayou doctor said "as mean and as mentally ill as the white people of Mississippi are they are not going to murder 986,000 Negroes." Instead, he said, they will rely on economic reprisals. He added that Louisiana Negroes could expect the same economic pressures from the councils later on.

MOUND BAYOU, Miss. — A railroad carload of coal and two van loads of clothing, food and toys arrived here Christmas week to aid poverty stricken farmers who have been caught in the throes of the White Citizens Councils' economic freeze.

Although about 2,000 families from the Delta and hill section of Mississippi were served, when the service center here closed Dec. 27, hundreds had to be turned away. Observers said many wept because there was not enough for everyone.

Chicago Ill.

The two van loads of gifts arrived from Los Angeles and other merchandise came from Washington and New Jersey.

Despite the fact that Mississippi had its best year in cotton, it was the worst for labor.

UNFAIR TO WORKERS

A reliable source in the state said the reason for this pathetic situation is that some plantation owners are refusing to settle fairly with Negro laborers for work done.

To help relieve this situation, Dr. T. R. M. Howard, militant head of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, made pleas over radio and television and while on speaking engagements in the East and Midwest.

Spearheading the drive to aid victims of economic reprisal, along with Dr. Howard, were:

The United Order of Friendship of America, headed by Dr. R. L. Drew; the Knights and Daughters of Tabor, led by P. M. Smith, and the Clarksdale and Mound Bayou American Legion posts and auxiliaries and the Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Winters, the former sharecropper on the Drew, Miss., farm of Dr. Theodore R. M. Howard, who had entered suit for $25,000 against Dr. Howard, charging him with an alleged discrepancy in a crop settlement and with abusing him during a quarrel over the business.

P. 7

He was duped into signing the damage suit, Winters told the Cleveland Call & Post, and deciding not to go through with it, he went to Dr. Howard and repudiated it.

Des Moines, Iowa

Formed Mob

When the White Citizens' Council which had drawn him into the situation found out that he had repudiated the suit, it formed a mob to seek revenge on him, Winters said. But Negro friends of Dr. Howard acted before the mob and spirited him and his family out of Mississippi in the early hours of Dec. 18, sendng him to Cleveland where they have relatives.

Winters said they were forced to flee after learning of the plot on their lives with only such possessions as they could cram into suitcases.

They were driven many miles from their home, they said and placed aboard the train for Cleveland.

Plot to Bankrupt

According to Winters, the Council plotted to kill off Dr. Howard's leadership of the state's Negroes by bankrupting him.

He said he was forced to accompany certain whites to the courthouse and handed some papers to sign. He claimed he did not know the nature of the documents, which were filed last October, until recently.

The family was put up at a Cleveland hotel and a "protective council," composed of the Call & Post, officials of the NAACP, and Urban League, formed to find Winters a job and the family a home.

HOWARD SAYS DEMOCRACY IS MOCKERY IN MISSISSIPPI

BATON ROUGE, La. — (ANP) — Dr. T. R. M. Howard, militant civil rights champion, told an Emancipation Day anniversary gathering last week that Mississippi whites were conducting a campaign of violence and economic reprisal aimed at driving out a half million Negroes in the next 10 years.

The Mound Bayou, Miss., physician told 1,000 listeners that Mississippi's congressional delegation should be challenged because a "mockery of democracy exists in the state."

He said white leaders told him that they felt they could stall off school integration and unlimited Negro voting for 10 years before the federal government moved in to force it.

"They know that once the Negro gets the unrestricted ballot in his hands there will be some changes made in Mississippi," he added.

Dr. Howard said in spite of the Negroes' problem in Mississippi, "the federal government has done nothing to help."

"The FBI can pick up pieces of a fallen airplane on the slopes of Colorado and find the man who caused the crash," he added, "but they can't find a white man when he kills a Negro in the south."

The Mississippi leader said the white citizens' councils are spearheading the economic reprisals, "dedicated to the proposition of continuing segregation at all costs."

He said Negroes are fired from their jobs, refused credit, forced to move from their homes, denied ginning facilities for their cotton for either trying to vote or signing school integration petitions.

"As mean and as mentally ill as the white people of Mississippi are they are not going to murder 986,000 Negroes," Dr. Howard added. Instead, he said, they will rely on

NEW YORK—A resolution calling upon "the U.S. Attorney General to direct the Federal Bureau of Investigation immediately to investigate violations of civil rights of American citizens residing in Mississippi and report its findings to the Attorney General for appropriate action" was passed at the 47th annual meeting of the NAACP here, last week.

The resolution cited "what appears to be a conspiracy on the part of White Citzens Councils of Mississippi to deprive colored persons of their civil rights and liberities which conspiracy has not been opposed by the governor or attorney general of the state and, has been encouraged by statements of Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi in exhortations to defy recent Supreme Court decisions banning racial segregation."

Another resolution authorized by the meeting urged the majority and minority leaders in both houses of Congress to take leadership in securing passage of urgently needed civil rights legislation at this session of the 84th Congress.

Professor Tells Rotarians Of His Findings

MEETING IN GREENVILLE

Sat. 1-14-56

By HELEN SHEARON

From The Commercial Appeal Greenville, Miss., Bureau

P. 5

GREENVILLE, Miss., Jan. 13. —West European interest in American foreign policy is shared with a similar interest in United States racial problems, according to an American professor of sociology who recently returned from a visit to England, Austria, and West Germany.

Memphis

Dr. Joseph Baylen, head of the Social Science Department of Delta State Teacher's College at Cleveland, Miss., told members of the Greenville Rotary Club that the extreme interest in the race issue stems partly from the fact that Europeans face a race problem of their own and partly from European associations with American Negro servicemen.

Tenn.

Toured On Grant

Dr. Baylen visited Europe last year for study on an American Philosophical Society research grant in aid. While there he visited European Rotary Clubs and was interested in the foreign groups interest in promoting international understanding.

He said most Europeans with whom he talked were curious about the "American South" and that the number one question asked him was, "What is going to be done about integration?".

The English, especially Londoners, are facing a race problem of their own, Dr. Baylen said.

British subjects from the West Indies and the Caribbean colonies have streamed into England during the past two years to the tune of about 35,000 per year, he said.

They have primarily migrated to the larger cities of England, and as British subjects expect to better themselves economically and socially by the move from the crowded colonies, the sociologist said.

Run Into Barrier

These migrants run into an invisible barrier which limits them economically as well as socially, he said. Negro speakers in Hyde Park were primarily non-marxist, he noted, and these speakers tended to hold up the can go.

Dr. Baylen also remarked that United States as an example.

These speakers in many instances called the English hypocritical with their "invisible barrier" for Negro subjects, he said, while they stated that at least an "honest" condition exists in the southern United States as to "how far" the Negro can go.

the United States Supreme Court decision of May, 1954, to integrate schools may have had some influence in the pro-American statements made by the West Indians.

MISSISSIPPIANS SHOUT LOUDEST ON INTEGRATION

Daily Tribune Chicago Ill. Sat 7-14-56

Would Accept Adlai but Prefer Symington

[This is the sixth in a series of articles on the political situation in the south by the chief of The Tribune's Washington bureau.]

BY WALTER TROHAN
[Chicago Tribune Press Service]

Jackson, Miss., July 13 — There is an old proverb along the lazy bayous of Mississippi that applies to all the sound and fury in the state over the controversial issue of segregation.

"People are like steamboats," the proverb runs, "they toot the loudest when they are in a fog."

Any visitor to the state—which is undoubtedly the farthest from integration of the white and Negro races in any degree—cannot help but be astonished by the violence of conversation on the social revolution occasioned by the Supreme court's decisions outlawing segregation in schools and public facilities.

What starts out as a pleasant dinner party winds up with angry shouting, table pounding, red faces, strained throat muscles and not a little hysteria. Curiously enough, the diners are not angry at one another or at Negroes.

Loudest When Wrongest?

It seems that they have to talk loud, and with conviction, perhaps to convince themselves. One cannot help but wonder if man isn't always at his loudest when he is at his wrongest.

Mississippi is a curious blend of tensions and frustrations. These are coupled with fanatical fervor that there shall be no mixing of the races.

What strikes the northern visitor is that Mississippians are not angry at Negroes individually. They don't hate Negroes as Adolph Hitler hated the Jews. Rather they are angry at the Supreme court, the federal government, the new crop of northern "abolitionists," and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the Negro group fighting to advance Negro rights.

Incidents Are Few

There have been attacks on a few individual Negroes and there have been pressures on whites who do not conform to the anti-integration pattern. These incidents have not been typical. Incidents have been surprisingly few when measured against the intensity of emotions.

The one incident of national proportions was the killing of a 14 year old Chicago Negro boy. Two white men, tried for the boy's murder, were freed by a jury. Some whites tell you the killing was justified because the boy made an advance to a white woman when he was trying to impress colored companions with his worldliness. Other whites regret the killing of a 14 year old boy of any race for any reason.

The state has 1,188,632 whites or 55 per cent. The whites are in the majority but only in the last 10 years. Ten years ago the state's population was 60 per cent Negro. Negroes have been heading north.

Economically Important

Among sober minded Mississipians, there is concern because Negroes are economically important to the state not only because they represent a sizable portion of consumer purchasing power, but because they represent also a sizable proportion of the labor supply.

Mississippi is primarily agricultural. Cotton has long been king. It is a state of small towns. Only a score or so have more than 10,000 inhabitants. After a fashion, Mississippi might be called the Indiana of the south, if one would go back to the day—not too long ago—when Indiana was a state without the large industrial communities it has today.

It is oversimplifying the situation to say Mississippi whites are living in the past. Many are as forward looking as any other American. It is true that traditions and the agricultural background have led white Mississippians to determine there shall be no integration. There isn't any and there is no disposition to move toward any.

Counter-Measures Taken

No state has taken more measures against integration. Some of the things done here are:

1. Passage of a constitutional amendment which would allow dissolution of the state's school system and permit support of white private schools.

2. Enactment of a law banning white attendance with Negroes in public schools.

3. Passage of a law against "conspiracy to violate" segregation laws.

4. Passage of a law requiring those who seek to vote to "interpret" a passage of the constitution. It can be assumed this will operate to deprive Negroes of the ballot.

5. Initiation of the Citizens Council movement, which has spread to other states in the south. These white groups, which claim close to 100,000 members, are fighting desegregation with a variety of gospels from white supremacy to state rights to contention that segregation was ordained by God.

Law Dies Aborning

Another proposed law would have made it illegal not "to conform with established traditions." This law died aborning when it was observed that this could apply to attendance in the Baptist church or the eating of catfish.

On the other side, leaders among the Negroes recognize that integration at best is a long way off. No Negro has gone to a white school or applied for entrance in a white college, as has been done in other states. There is some talk of law suits. There were some applications for entrance into white schools last fall but these were rejected.

More than school integration, the Negroes want group recognition on the community level—a voice in the community of which they are a part. This is more important than the end of Jim Crowism, altho the two may go together.

In Political Fog

Politically Mississippians are in a fog, altho not so much so as they have been. They are in the Democratic party to stay, they say, unless Gov. Harriman of New York or Sen. Kefauver [D., Tenn.], should get first or second place on the Democratic ticket. They do not like their support of integration.

Mississippians would accept Adlai Stevenson, considering him a compromise candidate between enforcement by bayonet as proposed by Harriman and the segregation the south wants.

Mississippians would rejoice over the nomination of Sen. Symington [D., Mo.]. They are enthusiastic for the former air secretary who was born in Massachusetts, brought up in Maryland, and made his fortune—financial and political—in Missouri.

If pressed, Mississippians will confess they don't know what Symington stands for on segregation or other issues, but they will confide that they feel he is "one of us."

New England Newsmen To See South Close Up

DELTA STOPS PLANNED

By KENNETH TOLER
From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss. Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 6. — Mississippi's "way of life" will be studied during the week by 21 New England editors and publishers on a state-community sponsored tour designed to get its "true story" to citizens in other sections from on-the-spot outside observers.

States represented are Connecticut, Maine, Massachusetts, New Hampshire, New York, Rhode Island and Vermont.

Although racial segregation is not paramount in the study, it is expected to draw major interest of the "look-seers."

Arrived Last Night

The newsmen, who arrived here Saturday night, will visit a cross-section of the state to view its growing industrialization as a balance to its former one-sided agricultural economy. They will also see its playgrounds on the Gulf Coast.

Two days will be spent in the heavily Negro populated Delta, and a visit to the all-Negro town of Mound Bayou is scheduled. Another stop is the Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes at Itta Bena.

Hal Decell, public relations director of the sponsoring State Sovereignty Commission, said the newsmen will be given the opportunity to interview Negro leaders, including editors, educators, officials and churchmen.

On that score, the public relations official of the agency, created at the 1956 legislative session as a legal "watchdog" in the state's efforts to peacefully preserve segregation, said, "There is no attempt and no thought on my part to sell them segregation as such.

"Our aim is to show them Mississippi so they can make an opinion from their own observations and first-hand information rather than rely on national publications which through sensationalism have misrepresented the overall state of affairs in Mississippi. We will show them whatever they want to see," Mr. Decell said.

"We think they will get better opinions of Mississippi this way than from reading certain national magazines," he said.

Mr. Decell, like most of the visiting newsmen, is a weekly newspaper editor.

Will Meet Governor

Sunday afternoon Gov. J. P. Coleman, chairman of the Sovereignty Commission, will meet the editors and publishers at the executive mansion. That night, they will attend a barbecue at the suburban lodge of the Mississippi Valley Gas Co.

Monday morning the newsmen board a Continental Southern bus for the week-long tour after being breakfast guests of the Mississippi Press Association and its president, Louis P. Cashman Jr. of Vicksburg.

Monday they will lunch at Kosciusko then spend the night at Columbus. Local citizens have arranged programs at both points.

A stop at the Hugh White State Park at Grenada will be made Tuesday before a tour of the Mississippi Vocational College and then the night at Cleveland. That stop will give them an opportunity to visit Mound Bayou, 12 miles from Cleveland.

A night program has been arranged by the Mississippi Power & Light Co. at its lodge near Cleveland, and Wednesday morning the visitors head for Vicksburg for an overnight stop and a round of entertainment.

Thursday morning they board a U. S. Engineers steamer for a trip down the Mississippi River to Natchez, where they will stay overnight and visit ante-bellum homes.

En route to the Gulf Coast Friday, they will stop at Columbia for lunch where Governor Coleman will join the party.

At Biloxi, they will attend a round of entertainment, including Gus Stevens' night club, and Saturday they'll board Mississippi Seafood Commission boats for an inspection of oyster beds.

Sunday morning they tour the National Guard Air Base at Gulfport where they are scheduled to board Air Guard planes for their return home.

Those Making Tour

Heading the list of visitors are Alfred Ball, president of the National Editorial Association and publisher of the Woodhaven, Long Island, Observer; Robert S. Barram, secretary of the New England Weekly Press Association and professor of journalism at Boston University, and J. Clark Samuel, president of the Massachusetts Press Association and editor of the Foxboro Reporter.

Other editors and publishers due to make the tour include:

Gordon Seavey of the Belmont, Mass., Citizen; Herbert S. Austin of the Wellesley, Mass., Townsman; Don Hersam of the New Canaan, Conn., Advertiser; Robert J. Robertson and Charles Mitchell, both of the Darien, Conn., Review.

Roswell S. Bosworth Jr. of the Bristol, R. I., Phoenix; Paul C. Cummings Jr. of the Peterborough, N. H., Transcript; Albert Rowbotham of the Ramford Falls, Maine, Times; Benton Dryden of the Woodstock, Vt., Standard.

William B. Rotch of the Milford, N. H., Cabinet; Howard N. Fowler of the Mansfield, Mass., News; Custiss S. Johnson of the Deep River, Conn., New Era; Richard P. Lewis of the Franklin, N. H., Journal-Transcript.

Lewis H. Shattuck of the Hardwick, Vt., Gazette; Sydney L. Cullen of the Rockland, Maine, Courier-Gazette! John P. Kelly of the Bridgeport, Conn., Herald; James H. Marsden of the Foxboro, Mass., Reporter, and John C. Bond of the Rockland, Mass., Standard.

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 18 (UP) —Twenty New England newspaper editors and publishers will travel through Mississippi next month to view the segregated South.

The State Sovereignty Commission's public relations director, Hal Degell, said yesterday the week-long tour would begin Oct. 7.

The trip is part of the state's program to publicize conditions in Mississippi, he said. The commission was organized by the 1956 Legislature to act as the state's "segregation watchdog."

Warns Citizens Council On Backing Democrat

P. 3

Special to The Commercial Appeal

SALLIS, Miss., Oct. 1.—A Jackson Circuit Court judge and leader in a States Rights movement told the Sallis Citizens Council Monday night "if Mississippians help elect a president advocating integration then the fight for segregation is doomed."

Addressing the Attala County group "dedicated to preservation of segregation" was Judge M. M. McGowan of Jackson, organizer of the Mississippians for State Rights who have qualified an independent slate of unpledged presidential electors in the November election.

Judge McGowan also said if "you help elect the nominees of either party, Democratic or Republican, then you had as well tear up the interposition resolution adopted by the Legislature and throw it in the waste basket."

Tues. 10-2-56

He centered his criticism on Adlai Stevenson, the Democratic nominee.

"You cannot lend your political support to an advocate of integration and then say you are going to resist him when he seeks to put into effect the very thing he ran upon, and the thing you have endorsed.

"Politics is the only weapon you have and when you hand it over to the enemy, he will of course knock your brains out with it," Judge McGowan said. "You use the ballot to set up and install the kind of government you want. If you want integration, then go ahead and vote for it.

"If any of you are laboring under the delusion that your Citizens Councils can maintain segregation in Mississippi after the people endorse and elect and throw this state to the integrationist candidates—just forget it," he said.

Segregation Will Remain, Coleman Tells East Editors

Commercial Appeal

P. 1

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Oct. 7.—Gov. J. P. Coleman told 20 New England editors and publishers Sunday that racial segregation will be maintained in Mississippi "for at least the next 50 years."

"That doesn't mean I think it will end then," he explained. "I just don't feel I can speak for the period beyond that."

Governor Coleman's views were given the newsmen as they prepared for a week-long bus tour of Mississippi for an on-the-spot observation and study of Mississippi's racial situation, as well as its general background.

Mansion Visited

The newsmen from seven New England states who arrived Saturday night, visited the Executive Mansion Sunday afternoon to meet Governor and Mrs. Coleman. They were served coffee.

Mon. 10-8-56

All phases of the state's problems dealing with the races were discussed by the Governor with the New Englanders, with particular interest shown by the visitors in school segregation, voting and Citizens Councils.

Governor Coleman's prediction of continuance of segregation was given in answer to a question from Richard J. Robertson of the Darien, Conn., Review.

"I feel that the whole argument (segregation vs. integration) will be a source of a lot of unrest and unhappiness in the next four to five years and then will settle itself of its own weight," the Governor said.

Pointing to the "natural reaction to the use of force" dating back to Civil War days, Governor Coleman said "any possibility of integration in the next 50 years was completely eradicated by the means to bring it about."

Legal Courses Cited

He said he referred to the force from the Federal Government level in not leaving the problem one for settlement by local state governments.

Governor Coleman said, "We don't intend to obey the Supreme Court's decisions because they are not based on law." At the same time, he said he was not going to criticize the court, because there are ample legal courses in Mississippi to preserve segregation.

Commercial Appeal

"As far as I am concerned, there will be no integration in Mississippi," he said. "I don't say that boastfully, but because it is not for the best interest of the state."

Mon. 10-8-56

He said indicative of the harmony existing between the races, "not a single suit has been filed to mix the races in the schools."

Governor Coleman attributed much of the "harmony" to the new school equalization program which is bringing educational opportunities for Negroes to an equal with the whites. He said he is approaching the situation "peacefully and with dignity" and has the co-operation of Negro leaders in the state.

Governor Coleman admitted a factor in the lack of integration efforts may possibly be the "stand-by" authority given the Legislature to abolish public education is integration is attempted.

"We do not anticipate any trouble between the races," he said. "There is no tension or malice or ill-will between the races."

Governor Coleman said he does not believe agitation will come from local Negroes, but if it does arise "it will be inspired by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People."

Negro Vote Cited

"However, the NAACP is not strong enough to bother us, and largely for that reason Mississippi has not sought to outlaw it," he said. "I feel if we have to contend with the NAACP it is better to have it in the open than underground."

The question of Negro voting was raised by Paul C. Cummings Jr., of the Peterborough, N. H., Transcript. The Governor said no effort was made to get Negroes to qualify for obvious reasons.

Asserting that Negroes vote in some areas, the Governor said, "I have not heard of any instance of trouble where they have voted."

Governor Coleman, in answer to a question about the Citizens Councils, said, "I think the movement was brought about by the Supreme Court decision and the NAACP movement." He added that "when the urgency passes, I feel that the Citizens Councils will pass along with it."

Governor Coleman assured the New Englanders that segregation is not maintained on a basis of hatred but on the "long experience of both races that each will be far better off and have less friction by being segregated."

He said the "idea of enforcing integration by force completely defeats any possibility of it happening."

Asked if Negroes were more highly educated would that lessen the effort for segregation, the Governor said:

"If a Negro had that much education, then the idea that he must associate with somebody else to bolster his position would be out of the window."

Tells Of Till Case

Defending the state's position in the famed Emmet Till case in Tallahatchie County, Governor Coleman said Mississippi employed outstanding counsel to seek conviction of the white men charged with murdering the teenage Chicago Negro.

"If the Negro Representative Diggs from Michigan and others had stayed out of the case, the chances are there would have been a conviction," he said.

Sitting in on the press conference at the mansion was Mrs. Hazel Brannon Smith of the Lexington and Durant weekly newspapers. Mrs. Smith is an official in the National Editorial Association. The editors leave Monday morning for Kosciusko and Columbus.

Governor of Mississippi Says Schools Will Not Integrate

Thurs. 9-13-56

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 12 (UP) —Gov. James P. Coleman said today the state would have total school segregation "as long as the people want it."

New York

Mr. Coleman predicted that Negroes would not try to gain entrance to white schools in Mississippi this year. He gave the following as his reasons:

¶The firm policy "adopted by the state government and endorsed by the people" against racial integration.

¶The people of the state have paid no attention to outside agitators.

¶The way the state constitution was amended in 1954. This permitted abolition of public schools as a last-resort means of maintaining segregation.

¶Negroes are taking justifiable pride in having their own institutions.

Governor Predicts Negroes Won't Try For Integration

World P. 23

Wed. 9-19-56

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) —"As long as the people want it," declared Mississippi's Governor James P. Coleman last week, "the state will have total segregation.

Coleman predicted that Negroes would not try to gain entrance into white schools in Mississippi this year. He gave the following as reasons why Negroes would not attempt admission:

(1) The firm policy "adopted by the state government and endorsed by the people" against integration.

(2) The people of the state have paid no attention to outside agitators.

(3) The way the state constitution was amended in 1934, permitting abolition of public schools as a last-resort means of maintaining segregation.

(4) Negroes are taking justifiable pride in having their own institutions.

Coleman also said he knew a number of ways of avoiding enforcement of the Supreme Court's integration rulings in addition to the legal defenses the state has used.

Eastland Asks Public Funds To Wage Integration Fight

Advertiser Fri. 4-27-56

Montgomery Ala.

TUPELO, Miss., April 26 (AP)—Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss today called for the use of public funds —"and we have a legal right to do so" — to fight integration.

Addressing the 1st Dist. convention of the Mississippi American Legion, Eastland said the South can no longer stay on the defensive.

P. 2-A

"The opposition has several million dollars," he said. "We must use public funds and we have a legal right to do so because in essence this is an attack upon the South.

"The first duty of the state is to protect its sovereignty. We must bring to the attenion of the people what integration will do to our school system."

The Mississippi Legislature recently voted $250,000 to finance the work of a newly created State Sovereignty Commission for the avowed purpose of resisting federal "encroachment" in any form. form.

The senator said the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is "a front, an action group. Behind it is a more powerful group directing its every move."

He did not identify the directing group.

He said border states—those between the segregated South and the integrated North and Midwest —have "weak-kneed political leaders."

He said "if we can win the border states I am confident of the outcome. The determination of the South has caused the people of the North to stop and think. Now they say 'We had better go slowly.'

"The average man thinks exactly as we do. We are not going to permit NAACP agitators to take over and run our states."

The senator said segregation fights are being waged in the North "and the outcome there will determine what happens here."

Eastland said the last thing Mississippi will do is to permit the NAACP to play a political game at the expense of "our children."

"The first line of defense is the home," he said. "If we lose the minds of children there is no hope for the future."

in Chicago, said "if we attempted to enforce segregation we would be subjecting ourselves to lawsuits."

Both the state and city have statutes providing for segregation of white and Negro passengers on all common carriers.

The Inside Story

Newsweek P. 21

U.S. SENATE—Northern Democrats were really rocked by elevation of confirmed segregationist Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi to head Senate Judiciary Committee (see page 40). GOP orators now will urge Negroes to vote Republican to insure control of Senate and this key committee. Democrats can't figure out how to counter the argument that Democratic control means Eastland can block confirmation of any judge favoring integration.

CAPITOL HILL—Don't be surprised if the antisegregationist forces pull an end-around play and try to tack a rider on the Health, Education, and Welfare Department money bill. Jackson, Miss. To Continue Bus Segregation

Jackson Daily Herald Wed. 4-25-56

JACKSON, Miss., April 24 (U.P.) —Mayor Allen Thompson said today he believes segregation will continue on city buses here despite National City Lines' desegregation orders to drivers.

"There will be no change whatever in our policy of segregation on buses or in any other way in Jackson," Thompson said.

The bus company, bowing to Supreme Court decision, told drivers here they "are no longer empowered to enforce segregation."

Constitutional Group Leader To Join Eastland At Rally

Commercial Appeal Tues. 7-3-56 P. 13

By NEIL SANDERS

John U. Barr, chairman of the Southwide Federation for Constitutional Government, will help Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) give a verbal outline of Federal encroachment on states' rights during a July 4 rally at Overton Park Shell.

Memphis Press-Scimitar

Robert Dobbs, program chairman, said yesterday the New Orleans industrialist, head of the pro-segregation organization formed in Memphis last year, will deliver a short address after Senator Eastland's talk.

M. P. 'Hot' Moore

Mr. Dobbs said more than 5,000 persons are expected to pack the shell for the free rally tomorrow, which begins at 8 p.m. Senator Eastland, chairman of the powerful Senate Judiciary Committee and outspoken foe of integration, will be featured speaker.

Motorcade Meeting

The Senator will drive from his Doddsville plantation tomorrow afternoon. He will be met at the Mississippi state line by a large motorcade of Memphians and will attend a dinner in his honor at the Chisca at 6:30 p.m.

The rally will begin with group singing led by Chalmers Walker. "God Bless America" will be sung first, then "Dixie."

M. P. 'Hot' Moore of Senatobia, Miss., a cattleman and longtime friend of Senator Eastland, will introduce the speaker. Dr. A. W. Dick of Second Presbyterian Church will deliver the invocation. Master of ceremonies will be Lake Hays, former county attorney.

On the platform with speakers will be representatives of the sponsoring organizations — West Tennessee division, Tennessee Federation for Constitutional Government; We, The People; Citizens Council of Shelby County, and Pro-Southerners.

Overton Accepts Invitation

Mr. Dobbs said Watkins Overton, former mayor of Memphis, has accepted an invitation to the rally.

Purpose of the rally is to inform the public of encroachment of the Federal Government on the rights of state and local governments, Mr. Dobbs said.

Twenty New England Newsmen Will Make Tour of Mississippi

Times-Picayune Tues. 9-18-56

JACKSON, Miss., Sept. 17 (AP)—The state Sovereignty Commission, set up to protect Mississippi's "way of life" and principally to maintain segregation, Monday announced 20 New Englanders will tour the state next month.

Most of the New Englanders are publishers. They include Alfred Ball, president of the National Editorial Association and publisher of the Woodhaven Observer of Woodhaven, Long Island, N. Y.

Hal Decell, public relations director for the commission, called the Oct. 7-14 tour "the latest move to get the truth about Mississippi to the citizens in other parts of the nation."

He said the tour will include stops in the towns of Jackson, Kosciusko, Columbus, Grenada, Cleveland, Vicksburg, Natchez, Columbia and a week end on the Gulf coast.

Decell quoted a letter from J. Clark Samuel of Foxboro, Mass., president of the Massachusetts Press Association, as saying:

"Everyone I have talked to is very much interested in the trip. They not only look forward to it as an enjoyable time, but apparently you will reap a harvest of well-written articles and pictures, from the way the boys have talked.

"We all seem to be unanimous in the feeling that Mississippi is doing something constructive in placing its viewpoint to Northern readers from a grass-roots base. They feel flattered that you have singled out the grass-roots press for your experiment. It could well be one of the finest things that has been done."

The Sovereignty Commission was created by the 1956 Legislature and given $250,000 to work with for two years. It has five full-time employes, headed by state Rep. Ney Gore as director. The work is overseen by a 12-member appointive commission of which Gov. J. P. Coleman is chairman.

The commission has authority to hire secret investigators. Whether it has done so has not been announced.

Talking Sense On The Race Problem In Mississippi

Advocate Sat. 9-15-56
Jackson, Miss. P. 4

During the past several days developments in the school desegregation efforts in several states have served to focus the attention of responsible citizens everywhere on the depth of feelings and emotions that can be aroused regarding the issue, yet nothing in this great challenge to the individual states, and to the nation justifies the conclusion that the Negro Citizens are solely responsible for these developments and therefore should have every stumbling block put in their road to continued progress.

From over in Ashville, North Carolina, the Ashville Times, one of that state's leading dailies (white) has come forth with an editorial calling upon all citizens of the state to start talking sense about the race problem in their community and state, which can well be used as a call for talking sense on the race problem in Mississippi.

The Ashville Times Editorial says:

It is imperative now that responsible citizens, irrespective of color or creed, talk sense about race problems in their communities and state. In resolving this crisis over public schools it is vital to the honor, peace and progress of the state that there be mutual respect, goodwill and intelligent cooperation between our white and colored races.

In the promotion of these objectives it is up to the white people to lead the way because the advantages of economic and political power are on their side.

Their first move should be to do everything they can to banish forever what is left of the cruel and absurd notion that there could possibly be any stigma attached to any human being because of race, color or other physical characteristics. The Creator never stigmatizes anybody . . .

The next step our white people should take to help create a wholesome climate for tolerance justice and interracial cooperation is to try to convince everybody, especially themselves, that in democratic America no citizen's rights are meted out on a basis of color, creed, occupation, education, intelligence, wealth or social position. Human dignity, freedom, justice and civil rights are indivisible—all our citizens must have them equally or none can ever be secure in them.

All our people, colored and white, need also to understand the vast difference between civil-legal rights and personal-social privileges. In the latter field discrimination is not a bad word nor an evil practice. In our personal affairs and social relationships we all discriminate and, indeed, must do so to get along.

In these relationships background, color of skin and other factors can and frequently do make practical differences which must be considered. Recognition of such differences does not reflect on anybody. Difference is not stigma, not sin. It is natural and necessary. A free society is full of differences and benefits enormously from them.

It is violently contradictory in a free nation for anyone to insist that "white supremacy," or any sort of racial "supremacy that can properly be a part of our government is the supremacy of individual freedom, justice, fair and equal treatment under law." Interracial conferences on segregation problems that do not start from the basis can accomplish no lasting good.

History and our own experiences teach us that attempts to force the mixing of the races in some areas of life, ignoring the customs and preferences of the people involved, are not only unrealistic but dangerous. Progress in these field must come slowly and naturally by mutual acceptance or the great gains already achieved could suffer a severe setback or be lost altogether . . .

For instance, the largest public swimming pool in the Asheville area has just been abandoned and our Municipal Golf Course seems to be on the way out because leaders of our white and colored citizens failed to face up to realities and agree on a voluntary arrangement whereby both of these splendid facilities could continue to serve this community . . . It could be decades, even generations, before the colored people of most communities could afford their own private recreational facilities.

By sensible cooperation on a fair and equal voluntary basis our white and colored citizens can "have their cake and eat it too" in public school, public recreation, in their churches and in many other fields . .

Because our Negro citizens are a minority group with relatively little political or economic power they would be severely penalized in the "private enterprise" developments in all the fields under discussion . . .

Our white citizens have delayed much too long in sharing policy making responsibilities in civic, educational and governmental affairs with colored fellow citizens. For instance, the case for public school segregation is greatly weakened without proper Negro representation on school boards and commissions.

The best insurance for a segregated public school system, voluntarily maintained, would be integration on the official level, giving Negroes a proportionate voice in the operation of separate schools, which most of them, as sincerely as the whites, genuinely desire. Furthermore, there should be a proper ratio of Negro representation on the official level in other governmental agencies, local and state.

We appeal to our Negro citizens to cooperate in voluntary segregation in the areas mentioned here not only to promote general peace and progress in North Carolina but for their own sake. It must be obvious to them that if undue pressure is applied to force racial integration in these sensitive fields in the months and years just ahead enormous damage could and would be done to our public service institutions and facilities as well as to existing friendly relations between our white and colored races.

Should disasters take place in this connection all informed people surely must realize which race would suffer most grievously. The Negro race has been handicapped far too much already. Our colored and white citizens owe it to themselves and to each other to cooperate intelligently in peaceful and constructive evolution rather than to allow their current racial difficulties to precipitate chaos and revolution. — Asheville (N.C.) Times.

Help needed from 'outside' editors told

MOUND BAYOU, Miss. (ANP) — "The job must be done from the outside if colored people are to gain their full rights in Mississippi," an unidentified clergyman told visiting New England editors last week.

The 20 New England editors, down South for a "firsthand" look at segregation, were told by citizens of this all-colored town of Mound Bayou that efforts to secure "education, voting rights, and equal justice" were subjected to heavy pressure.

Baltimore

C. V. THURMOND, colored postmaster, said the "unseen pressure" in parts of Mississippi denies them equal justice or equal education, and often means that colored people do not even try to vote.

"In some areas, it would mean suicide to try," Thurmond added.

Gov. J. P. Coleman told the writers that Mississippi does not encourage colored people to vote but added that their failure to do so stems only from unwillingness to pay a poll tax or from an inability to pass a literacy test.

* * *

H. G. HUMES of Greenville said that colored people there vote freely, but complained of unequal rights before the courts. "We have a dual system of justice when it comes to colored people," Humes said.

-Colored leaders in Mound Bayou (population 1330) were forthright in their talks with the editors. C. P. Hall, commander of the town's American Legion, said he felt that he was taking chances by his stand. "Life is dear," he said, "but so are other things."

A minister at the Mississippi Vocational College at Itta Bena told the editors that after he voted in 1953, his house was burned, he was put in jail and his license to operate several small businesses was revoked.

Mississippi's Way Of Life Pitted Against Human Dignity Editors Told

Advocate Sat. 11-20-56

Biloxi, Miss., Oct. 15.—The nineteen white New England editors, concluding a tour of the state, left by plane for their homes Sunday after hearing a Negro declare "Mississippi's way of life is pitted against human dignity. P. 1

The declaration came from a Negro who had written last month asking to be heard by Alfred Ball, president of the National Editorial Assn., and head of the delegation which made a week's first-hand study of segregated Mississippi.

Friends of the Negro asked that he not be identified in news accounts, saying this would endanger his livelihood or worse.

Ball met the Negro in the corridor of a "whites only" hotel at nearby Gulfport last night and asked him to speak to the other editors as well. In the corridor and in talking later to three of the editors, he said:

"You should weigh the value of Mississippi's way of life against the value of human dignity. Mississippi's way of life is pitted against human dignity. A way of life that destroys a man should be done away with. P. 8

Not Happy

"The press outside Mississippi has done as much for the Mississippi Negro as he has been able to do for himself. Please don't be carried away by the favorable things you saw and spread the idea that the Mississippi Negro is happy. He is not."

William B. Rotch, editor and published for the Milford (N. H.) Cabinet, called the incident "the high point of the trip for me." He was one of three editors who asked to talk to the man at greater length away from party.

The weekly editors were guests of the State Sovereignty Commission on the "see for yourself" tour. The commission, created by the 1956 legislature to preserve Mississippi's way of life and segregation, said the tour's purpose was not to "sell" segregation but to allow the editors to form their own opinions first-hand.

The Negro told the editors that his race votes freely in only a very few Mississippi counties, among them Harrison (Biloxi and Gulfport) and Warren (Vicksburg).

Charge Intimidation

When he began talking about education, Hall and a number of Mississippians present interrupted, declaring Mississippi is doing her utmost to give the Negro equal educational facilities.

Voices grew high-pitched and two New England editors protested the Mississippians were "intimidating this man right here."

The Negro then went on to say that the visitors were shown Gulfport's new Negro school but were not shown "a rundown little Negro school on the other side of town, about four blocks from a splendid white school."

"It's not economically sound to replace that run-down school with a new Negro school, just for the sake of equal facilities," he argued.

The Negro said he felt the purpose of the tour was to "give Mississippi a better press"—a more favorable opinion in the nation's newspapers. "Why not merit a better press," he asked.

Mound Bayou Negroes Tell Editors Of Pressure Handicap

Advocate Jackson, Miss. Sat. 10-13-56

Mound Bayou, Miss., Oct. 10—Negro Citizens of this famed all-Negro town of the State of Mississippi, told a group of New England editors touring the state observing the effects of segregation that that is heavy pressure against the effort of Negroes for education, voting rights and equal justice.

In talks before the 18 editors and publishers here on tour to study "Mississippi's way of life," the Negro leaders spoke bluntly.

"There is a dual system of justice in Mississippi when it comes to the Negro," said the Rev. H. H. Hume of Greenville, president of a National Baptist Association.

C. V. Thurmond, postmaster of this all-Negro town (pop., 1,330) that lies in the rich Delta, said it is "the unwritten law and unseen hand that keeps Negroes under pressure."

The editors are making a week-long tour of the state as guests of the State Sovereignty Commission, set up to fight any move toward racial integration in the schools or elsewhere.

One of the crowd of students intrviewed on the college campus told the editors he had no desire to "be a white man but I want to be treated as a man."

An editor said a Negro minister visiting on the campus told him "the job must be done from the outside" if Negroes ever "gain their full rights" in Mississippi. He did not identify him.

The editor added that the Negro clergyman told him that after he cast a vote in the 1953 election "his house was burned, he was put in jail and his license to operate several small businesses was withdrawn."

Some of the editors, who told newsmen privately that their schedule was so tight they could not talk to enough Negroes, had ample opportunities for interviews today.

One Out Of 22

Mississippi segregationists, it now develops, were able to indocrinate one of those New England editors after all.

Twenty-one of the 22 small town newsmen recently conducted on an expense-paid tour of the Magnolia State returned home "shocked" and "appalled" by the injustices they saw.

Wholesale inequities in schools, parks, playgrounds and other tax-supported facilities were bad enough.

Oct. 15-16

But the most disturbing discovery, they reported, was the brazen manner in which Mississippi officials are violating the constitutional guarantee of the right to vote.

Baltimore, MD

While 21 members of the group were observing these alarming hallmarks of fascism in America, the 22nd apparently was stubbornly looking the other way.

Sid Cullen, city editor of the Rockland (Maine) Courier-Gazette, somehow reached the fantastic conclusion that colored people in Mississippi had no desire for first-class citizenship nor were they seeking an end to their separate but unequal existence.

What a lobster of a lie!

Since Cullen comes from an area where few, if any, colored people live, it is not surprising that he could be so easily fooled by his magnolia-mannered hosts.

But surely he must realize that he is parroting the same old line segregationists have been using since emancipation.

Moreover, on what logical basis can Cullen, after a five-day guided visit in the state, make the absurd claim that a million Mississippians are not just as anxious to be full-fledged citizens as residents of Missouri, Massachusetts or even his native Maine?

Slavery And Segregation

Afro-American

Mississippi's Senator James O. Eastland, in one of his expansive oratorical moments while addressing the Klan-like and subversive White Citizens Council, declared that slavery was the finest thing that had happened to the ignorant African people.

Sat. 2-7-56

It is pretty difficult for us in this day to understand what slavery was like. But you can get some idea if you want to read some of the biographies of men who were slaves.

P. 4

And you wouldn't take the word of some slaves who described their condition because you would know that they would be prejudiced or one-sided, or that they would be moved by hatred of their masters.

But most anybody would take Booker T. Washington's word.

THIS IS WHAT he says about slavery. It is told by Dorothy Canfield Fisher in the December issue of the American Heritage Magazine:

"I was born a slave on a Virginia plantation about 1858.

"My home had been a log cabin with a dirt floor about 14 by 16 feet square.

Baltimore, Md.

"We slept on the frowsy piles of filthy rags laid on the dirt floor.

"Until I was quite a big youth, I wore only one garment—a shirt made out of rough refuse flax.

"We slaves had cornbread and pork because they could be grown on plantations without much expense.

"I had never seen anything except the slave quarters on the plantation where I was born, with a few glimpses of the 'big house' where our white owners lived.

"I cannot remember ever, during my childhood and youth, not one single time, when the family sat down together at a table to eat a meal as human families do.

"We ate as animals do, wherever an edible morsel was found.

"WE USUALLY took our food up in our fingers, sometimes from the skillet, sometimes from a plate held on our knees and as we chewed on it, held it as best we could in our hands.

"Life outside the cabin was as slovenly and disorderly as inside.

"The white owners made no effort to keep things up.

"They really could not.

"Slaves worked; any form of work was too low for the white people to do.

"Since white folks did not work they did not know how work should be done.

"The ignorant slaves, already ignorant of better standards, seldom got around to mending the fences, or putting back a lost hinge, or a sagging gate or door.

"Weeds grew wild everywhere, even in the yard.

"Inside the big house when a piece of plaster fell from a wall or ceiling, it was a long time before anybody could stir himself to get it replastered."

* * *

THIS IS Booker T. Washington's estimate of slavery as it affected him and it is an ugly picture.

The only reason that Senator Eastland says that slavery was good for colored people is because he would like to continue imposing segregation on them today.

That is, a condition in which he lives off the work of somebody else. He would like that.

There are a lot of people in the world who would like it, but it doesn't do them any good, nor does it do the slaves any good.

And you only have to read Booker T. Washington's words to realize how much of ill it would do both races.

Fortunately for us, slavery wasn't about to master Booker T. Washington. He had two things on his side: love of freedom, and the help of God-fearing, dedicated New England people.

Those same agencies are at work now and the number of white people who hate segregation and slavery as much as the old New Englanders did is greater than ever.

We Don't Believe It

Dixie newspapers have been playing up a report that the Board of Aldermen of all-colored Mound Bayou, Miss., is going to bar what they call race agitators, including the NAACP, from holding meetings there.

We don't believe it.

Mississippi is getting a lot of unfavorable publicity. It would like to silence the colored protestants altogether, just as it is now forbidding them from voting and expressing themselves politically.

It would like to make it appear that there is no protesting voice in Mississippi against the lawlessness and terrorism that currently are gripping that state.

The constitutional right of freedom of speech and assembly is denied colored people in most Mississippi towns.

It is not likely that Mound Bayou would join this conspiracy of silence.

Especially is this so, since the votes of Mound Bayou's citizens are not counted in state elections any more than the other individual colored voters in other parts of the state.

Mound Bayou is one oasis of freedom in all Mississippi.

We don't think it will dry up.

Legal Headache Ahead

Efforts of the bitter-end states to circumvent the Supreme Court's decision on parks and recreation areas may result in prolonged and fruitless litigation.

The Virginia proposal to dispose of public parks to private interests in order to avoid integration has already run into disapproval of a Federal District Court.

But the state's attorney general, refusing to see the handwriting on the wall, has already served notice of plans to appeal to the Supreme Court, if necessary.

Many of the state parks and city recreation areas are erected on lands given by public-minded citizens, who inserted in the deeds a provision that the property would be returned to the irginal owner or his heirs if it is not used exclusively for the purpose it was given.

In some cases the property was given for public parks, without any mention of race.

In others, the deeds restricted its use to white persons only.

In either case, there is going to be enough court action to give the South a real legal headache if serious attempts are made to transfer public parks to private interests.

Merely A Smokescreen

The Florida Pardons Board has commutted to life imprisonment the sentence of Walter Lee Irvin, 28, who twice has been sentenced to the electric chair in the Groveland, Fla., 'little Scottsboro' case.

Gov. Leroy Collins, who recommended the Pardons Board action, criticized the NAACP for its interference in the Irvin case and other cases involving civil rights.

However, except for the NAACP's intervention, Irvin would have been executed.

It was the NAACP which dug up the facts and exposed the lack of due process in the Florida court's handling of the Groveland affair.

If the courts and Governor Collins could have been depended upon in the first instance to see that justice was done there would have been no reason for the NAACP's alleged 'interference.'

The governor's criticism of the NAACP is a smokescreen set up to hide the incompetence and prejudice of Florida courts where justice to colored people is involved.

Saboteurs At Work

The Corpus Christi segregationists who made the ridiculous objection to the inclusion of a colored wise man in The Nativity scene in a downtown park appear to have started something.

The legend seems well authenticated that one of the three wise men was an Ethiopian.

Now the White Citizens Council has indicated they would like to go even further.

They want to delete from the Bible all references to the fact that Moses' wife was colored; that Ethiopia's Queen of Sheba visited King Solomon and that Simon the Cyrenian, who helped Jesus with His cross on the way to Calvary, was not white.

Not satisfied with having perverted history and subverted the Constitution, they now would rewrite the Holy Scripture itself.

ATLANTIC CITY—The following resolution condemning the White Citizens Council in Dixie and calling on President Eisenhower to stop the reign of terror in Mississippi was passed by delegates to the 14th State CIO Convention here recently.

"Whereas: The New Jersey State CIO Council is greatly disturbed and concerned about the revival of the old Ku Klux Klan under the term White Citizens Council, and

Baltimore, Md.

"Whereas: we believe that the time for concerted action is at hand and racial tension in the South is the tightest it has ever been; and

"WHEREAS: increasing violence is reported in many sections, although official statistics are sadly lacking, and suspicion and fear between the races are reaching new heights; and

"Whereas: in the White Citizens Council, unlike the Ku Klux Klan, the leaders are not thugs or hoodlums, but are on the contrary, in most cases, men who are leaders in the community, in business, in society and in churches.

"This Council has mushroomed into an organization in Mississippi with a reported membership of some 65,000 persons; and

* * *

"WHEREAS: the literature of the Council spells out clearly that the nature of the organization is to accomplish the denial of civil rights and civil liberties, through economic pressure, against members of the colored race who are not cooperative.

"These economic pressures deny businessmen the right to purchase supplies, deny veterans the right to own a home, de. them freedom from fear and also forces citizens to violate the laws of this nation.

"Now, therefore be it resolved that we urge every Congressman to pledge that in 1956, when the Congress reconvenes,

"TO SUPPORT a resolution or introduce a resolution that will bring about a reduction in the Congressional representation of those states which deny any of its inhabitants the right to exercise his vote; and

"Be it further resolved that we firmly believe that Congressional committees already established should investigate denial of civil liberties and civil rights in this country.

"We strongly believe in Article 14, Section 2 of the Constitution which states:

"REPRESENTATIVES shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective number, counting the whole number of persons in each state, including Indians not taxed;

"But whenever the right to vote at any election for electors of President and Vice President, or for United States representatives in Congress, executive and judicial officers.

"Or the members of the Legislature therof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such state, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States,

"Or in any way abridge, except for participation in rebellion or other crime.

THE BASIS of representation therein shall be reduced in the proportion which the number of such male citizens shall bear to the whole number of male citizens twenty-one years of age in such state.

"And, be it further resolved that we call on the President of the United States to stop this reign of terror . . . "

BOSTON — The Liberal Citizens of Massachusetts last week went on record as condemning the law enforcement authorities of Mississippi for failure to obtain convictions in the slaying of three colored persons.

Copies of the statement, in the form of a resolution, have been sent to the Department of Justice and members of the Massachusetts Congressional delegation.

The resolution was drawn at the organization's recent annual meeting and signed by John N. M. Howells of Weston who is chairman.

IT CALLS attention to the legal power of the Department of Justice to intervene when the basic rights of any citizen are abridged and local authorities fail to correct the situation.

And the resolution further demanded that the attorney general investigate and take action against those responsible for the kidnap - murder of Emmett Louis Till, the Rev. George W. Lee and Lamar Smith.

Complete text of the resolution follows:

WHEREAS, the Liberal Citizens of Massachusetts has long maintained that the purposes of American democracy cannot be completely fulfilled while second-class citizenship is permitted to exist anywhere in our land;

And whereas, the denial of civil rights, including specifically the rights of colored citizens to vote in many of our Southern states, assumes the proportion of a national scandal;

And whereas, there has been an outbreak in the state of Mississippi of crimes against colored people which has outraged the conscience of America, including:

A. The shotgun slaying of the Rev. George W. Lee of Belzoni for registering to vote and for urging others to register;

B. The murder of Lamar Smith on the courthouse square at Brookhaven for registering to vote despite the threats of violence against him;

C. The brutal kidnap - murder of 14-year-old Emmett L. Till in Money;

AND WHEREAS, local authorities appear either unwilling or unable to cope with this wave of terror, as perhaps most schockingly exemplified by a grand jury's refusal to indict Emmett Till's confessed kidnappers;

And whereas, statutory law empowers the Department of Justice of the United States to intervene when the fundamental rights of any citizen, under the law, are abridged and local authorities refuse or fail to remedy the evil;

And whereas, the Liberal Citizens of Massachusetts, its membership being of all derivations, at its annual meeting held at the Parker House, Boston, did unanimously condemn the shameful miscarriages of justice as above set forth:

* * *

NOW THEREFORE be it resolved that while condemning this patent mal-administration of justice, our organization emphasizes that the intolerance and prejudice against racial segments manifested throughout the United States and in other areas of the world bear a degree of responsibility for these crimes against humanity perpetrated in Mississippi;

And be it further resolved that we, the Liberal Citizens of Massachusetts, respectfully petition the Attorney General of the United States under his statutory powers,

To investigate and to take federal action against the persons responsible for these unpunished crimes.

And to secure for all our citizens, wherever resident, the equal rights which they are guaranteed under the Constitution of the United States;

And be it further resolved that copies of this resolution be sent to such public servants, associations and publications as may be deemed appropiate.

Times says Eastland cannot halt fight against jim crow

Afro-American Baltimore, Md.

Jan. 1-14-56

WASHINGTON — The New York Times, Thursday, registered a strong protest against the current hearings being staged by a Senate Subcommittee headed by Sen. James O. Eastland (Dem., Miss.)

The Times accused the Senate probers of singling out the newspaper because of its editorial policies.

The editorial followed the questioning of seven witnesses on Communist infiltration of the press in Wednesday's hearings.

Three of the witnesses were present Times employees, three were former employees, while the seventh was a theatre owner.

* * *

"WE DON'T question the right or the propriety of any investigation of the press by any agency of Congress," the editorial said.

"It is the inescapable responsibility of Congress, however, to make certain that such inquiry be conducted in good faith and not motivated by ulterior motive," it continued.

THE EDITORIAL went on to state that it was the policy of them to not "knowingly employ a member of the Communist Party in the news or editorial departments because we would not trust his ability to report the news objectively or to comment honestly.

The discovery of present Communist Party membership on the part of such an employee would lead to his immediate dismissal."

The editorial said that it was "possible to atone through good performance for past error."

"IT IS OUR business to decide whom we employ. We do not propose to hand over that function to the Eastland Subcommittee," it continued.

It seems to us ... that the Times has been singled out for this attack precisely because of the vigor of its opposition to many of the things for which Mr. Eastland, his colleague, Mr. Jenner (Sen. William E. Jenner, Rep., Ind.) and the subcommittee's counsel stand—that is, because we have condemned segregation in the Southern schools;

"Because we have challenged the high - handed and abusive methods employed by various congressional committees;

* * *

"BECAUSE WE have denounced McCarthyism and all its works; because we have attacked the narrow and bigoted restrictions of the McCarran Immigration Act;

"Because we have criticized a security system which conceals the accuser from his victim; because we have insisted that the true spirit of American democracy demands a scrupulous respect for the rights of even the lowliest individual and high standards of fair play," the editorial stated.

"If this is the tactic of any member of the Eastland Subcommittee, and if further evidence reveals that the real purpose of the present inquiry is to demonstrate that a free newspaper's policies can be swayed by congressional pressure, then we say to Mr. Eastland and his counsel that they are wasting their time.

"This newspaper will continue to determine its own policies. It will continue to condemn discrimination, whether in the South or in the North.

"IT WILL continue to defend civil liberties. It will continue to challenge the unbridled power of governmental authority.

"It will continue to enlist good will against prejudice and confidence against fear.

"We cannot speak unequivocally for the long future. But we can have the faith.

"And our faith is strong that long after Eastland and his subcommittee are forgotten; long after segregation has lost its final battle in the South, long after all that was known as McCarthyism is a dim, unwelcomed memory; long after the last congressional committee has learned that it cannot tamper successfully with a free press, the New York Times will still be speaking for the men who make it, and only for the men who make and speaking, without fear or favor, the truth as it sees sees it."

Court-Attacking, Fiery Eastland Called Ardent Foe Of Red-Inspired Integration

Advertiser 2-4-56 Montgomery, Ala.

Sun. 2-5-56

WASHINGTON, Feb. 4 (AP)—Wags in Congress say the two southernmost parts of the United States are Key West, Fla., and Sen. James O. Eastland of Mississippi.

Due north of Eastland, they say, lies the 20th century.

Eastland, fast emerging as the top Southern spokesman in the bitter fight over racial segregation in public schools, ignores such tongue-in-cheek sallies.

He is too busy, too intent on one goal: to save, if he can, the "Southern way of life." And he is convinced that this way of life is under heavy attack from both communism and the U.S. Supreme Court. As Eastland sees it, the targets are not too far apart. He is a long-time foe of communism, and with dark suspicion he regards the nine black-robed Supreme Court justices as "brainwashed" victims of Red plotting.

COMMIE PLOT

The Communist scheme, he says, is to destroy states' rights as an initial step toward eventual overthrow of the United States government.

As part of his campaign to forestall such a threat, he currently is priming his guns for a fresh assault on alleged Communist infiltration in newspapers, TV stations and perhaps other segments of the communications field.

Wary at tipping his hand, Eastland says only that his Red-hunting Senate Internal Security subcommittee is investigating "a former Communist cell" of people once employed on a Long Island, N.Y., newspaper and "a Communist now employed by a television station in a major Southern city."

"The subcommittee," he says, "will continue its investigation of communism and Communist activity no matter where it may lead us."

CITES EVIDENCE

The Senate group already has turned up evidence of what Eastland describes as "a significant effort on the part of Communists to penetrate leading American newspapers."

The New York Times, acknowledging congressional authority to investigate the press, contended Eastland had failed to prove that any of the former Communists exposed during a three-day hearing on Capitol Hill last month actually twisted or "slanted" the news while employed on various New York newspapers.

Editorially the Times said it had reached "the obvious conclusion that the Times has been singled out for attack precisely because of its opposition to many of the things for which Mr. Eastland stands."

Among other things, it noted the Times has frequently denounced segregation in Southern schools.

'SEES RED'

The subject almost literally makes Eastland see Red and his critics contend that his fierce and nostalgic affection for the traditions of the old Deep South—including segregation—reflect a man at war with changing times.

They declare further that in the controversy over school segregation the senator represents a minority of die-hard Southern extremists rather than the South as a whole.

But the 51-year-old Mississippian has a host of warm admirers, and many serious thinkers agree, in whole or in part, with his view that the Supreme Court's decision against segregation in public schools trespasses on the sovereignty of the individual states.

"The problem of segregation must be solved at the state level and cannot be done at the federal level," says Sen. Walter F. George (D-Ga).

STEPPED OUT

And Gov. Allan Shivers of Texas says the high court justices "stepped out of their judicial robes when they ruled segregation in Public schools is unconstitutional."

Eastland declares that the "best elements" are on his side in the dispute, and he adds: "Those who would mix little children of both races in our schools are following an illegal, immoral and sinful doctrine . . ."

Such a doctrine, Eastland maintains, plays right into the hands of communism.

In defying the Supreme Court's school decision, he said in a Senate speech:

"Investigation of the authorities upon which the Supreme Court relied (in formulating its decision) reveals to a shocking degree their connection with and participation in the worldwide Communist conspiracy.

"Our court has been inductrinated and brainwashed by left-wing pressure groups."

NO COMPROMISE

Declaring the court's ruling will result in a "century of litigation" in the South, Eastland says:

"There will be no compromise. The Southern people will not give an inch."

Unlike Dixie's congressional firebrands of the past—such as Sen. Theodore Bilbo and Rep. John Rankin of Mississippi and Sen. Huey Long of Louisiana—Eastland is a taciturn, soft spoken man who seldom raises his voice in anger. He smoulders, but rarely flames.

He is scrupulously polite. With almost courtly grace, he addresses white witnesses before his Senate subcommittee as "Mr." or "Mrs." Negro witnesses he calls either by their first name or "boy."

Shy on theatrics, Eastland is nevertheless an effective speaker and frequently sprinkles his remarks with scholarly allusions to Thomas Jefferson, Abraham Lincoln and his No. 1 idol, John C. Calhoun. He is a profound student of what is known in Dixie as the War Between the States—and an ominivorous reader of real-life detective magazine stories. These factual whodunits he devours at a rate of two a day.

Mississippi Parley On Religion Periled By Ban on Minister

By MILTON BRACKER

The segregation issue may lead to the cancellation of an annual religious emphasis program that has been held at the University of Mississippi since 1939.

Sat. 2-11-56

Four out of five main speakers and seminar leaders who were to have appeared between Feb. 19 and 22 have withdrawn. They acted primarily because of the previous withdrawal by the university of an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio.

New York,

Meanwhile, one professor at the university and another at Mississippi State College resigned in related protests. The state Legislature formally praised the chancellors of the institutions for accepting the resignations.

N. Y.

Mr. Kershaw, a white member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, had declared he would not promise not to discuss the segregation question if it were raised from the floor. His announced theme was "Religion and Modern Drama."

William Campbell, director of religious life at the university, said by phone last night that the holding of the meeting was "questionable at this moment."

Mr. Campbell explained that the program was arranged by a group called The Committee of 100, made up of students, faculty members and local clergymen. Funds are raised privately. The state-owned university simply furnishes the place and the essential utilities.

Times

The executive committee of The Committee of 100 will decide next week whether it can go ahead with the project. The committee membership itself was said to have "mixed feelings."

Two Professors Resign

The resignation at the university was that of Dr. Morton King Jr., Professor of Sociology. He took the step on the ground that the university no longer would defend freedom of speech and thought.

P.C-32

At the Mississippi State College, William Buchanan, Professor of Government, also resigned.

The resignations were accepted by Cancellor J. D. Williams of the university and Chancellor Hilbun of State College.

A resolution adopted by the state House of Representatives in Jackson praised the chancellors for their attitudes as expressed in the acceptances of the resignations.

The four speakers who have notified the university that they would not attend the religious emphasis program are the Rev. Joe Earl Elmore, minister of the Methodist Church of St. Paul and St. Andrew, Eighty-sixth Street and West End Avenue, in New York; the Rev. George Chauncy of the First Presbyterian Church, Monticello, Ark.; the Rev. Joseph H. Fichter of Loyola University, New Orleans, and Rabbi Milton L. Grafman of Temple Emanu-El, Birmingham, Ala.

'Shock' Is Expressed

In a telegram sent Thursday night, Mr. Elmore informed the sponsors of the program:

"I am compelled to express my sense of shock that an academic institution dedicated to the search for truth would carefully screen all prospective speakers * * * to the end of excluding anyone whose views might be controversial. The action of the University of Mississippi is an affront to the maturity and intelligence of its student body, faculty and staff, and it is a disservice to education, democracy and the Christian faith. * * *"

The speaker, who has not withdrawn as of last night, according to Mr. Campbell, is Col. Francis T. Miller, a Virginian who once ran for Governor of that state.

In his letter of resignation Professor Buchanan said last night he had made five main points:

1. The Board of Trustees' screening order, applying to any potential speaker on the campus.
2. The successful efforts to prevent Hodding Carter, southern editor, from addressing the State College chapter of the American Association of University Professors last spring.
3. The introduction into the Legislature of a bill "which apparently would make it a crime for a teacher of government [or anyone else] to criticize any official or policy of the state government." Professor Buchanan explained that this was a criminal libel and slander bill, which had not yet been acted upon.
4. Chancellor Williams' apparently successful efforts at the University of Mississippi to prevent a minister of the gospel [Mr. Kershaw] from discussing "music and religion" with students at the university.
5. The statement by a trustee "which we heard this morning [Feb. 8] to the effect that while everyone has a right to think what he pleases, we have the right to know what an employe thinks—and the right not to hire him if we do not approve of it." Professor Buchanan di dnot name the trustee. He said this version of what had been said was based on notes taken by several persons.

Professor Buchanan's letter concluded:

"When ministers are prevented from speaking to students and editors from speaking to faculty members, and when trustees feel the ymust screen not only our speakers but our thoughts, it appears to me that a college cannot perform its functions as an institution of higher learning.

The Rev. Alvin Kershaw

"Before the law is passed which might make the expression of these sentiments a criminal act, I wish to submit my resignation effective as of the termination of my present contract."

Chancellor Hilbun, whom Professor Buchanan described as "quite fair and generous," replied with a general statement of his own life-time devotion to the principle of academic freedom. Then he added:

"I should like to state here what I've previously said: There is a line between the promulgation of the findings of scholarship and the promulgation of opinions and personal bias. You have failed, it seems to me, to distinguish between them."

Chancellor Hilbun relieved Professor Buchanan as of Feb. 9, but said his salary would continue at the discretion of the president of the college and the Board of Trustees. Their next monthly meeting is Feb. 16.

Legislature Lauds Action

The legislative resolution praising the acceptance of the two resignations said in part:

"Our state-supported institutions of higher learning should reflect the thinking of our people and, of right, should be the primary exponent and protectors of our culture and traditions.

"There have been attempts by misguided reformers from both within and without willfully or unintentionally to teach ideologies contrary to and undermine the traditions and culture of the South."

Representative Joel Blass of Stone County opposed the resolution. He said the problem had been solved by the resignations and "I don't want to see us take action that will mark us as a vindictive people."

The religious emphasis program decision is expected to be made by the executive committe on Monday night. The possibilities are: cancellation of the program, or replacement of those who have wtihdrawn by local speakers.

Mr. Kershaw, an Episcolalian, recently won $32,000 for an expert knowledge of jazz, as displayed on The $64,000 Question television program.

Controversy on Campus

It was confirmed in Oxford, Miss., that a related campus controversy has built up about a student who said at an Ohio conference he would seek to set up inter-racial meetings when he returned to Mississippi.

The student is Billy Ray, a senior of Eupora, Miss. He attended a Christian conference at Athens, Ohio, Dec. 27 to Jan. 1. A source not strongly identified with either side in the general segregation issue said there had been rumors of serious trouble when Mr. Ray returned, and that he had unquestionably encountered "some disfavor" on the campus.

But despite the uncomfortable atmosphere, this sourse added, Mr. Ray had contitnued as a feature writer on the university publication, The Mississippian, and had not suffered loss of official status or association.

ANOTHER PROFESSOR QUITS IN MISSISSIPPI

Instructor At State College Hits 'Thought Screening'

Sun. 2-10-56

STARKVILLE, Miss., Feb. 9.—(UP)—An assistant government professor at Mississippi State College resigned Thursday in protest of what he called high-level efforts to "screen our thoughts."

President Ben Hilbun accepted the resignation and relieved him of his duties immediately.

Memphis Press

William Buchanan leveled broadside criticisms at legislative and administrative policies in higher education in Mississippi.

His resignation followed by two days that of a University of Mississippi department head, Dr. Morton King, who quit because the university cancelled the scheduled talk of a minister who favors racial integration.

Professor Buchanan listed among the developments which "disturbed" him the screening of speakers at state-supported schools, restrictive measures now before the Mississippi Legislature, and the withdrawal of a speaking invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw, Ohio Episcopal minister, by the University of Mississippi.

He also charged that President Hilbun had successfully prevented Greenville, Miss., newspaper editor Hodding Carter from addressing a campus faculty organization.

President Hilbun replied that "To my way of thinking, the scholar not only has the right but the duty to seek the truth and to follow the pursuit wherever it may lead.

"These rights and obligations of duty have not been violated at Mississippi State College during my long experience nor will they be as long as I am in the president's office."

Kershaw Action Echoes

Commercial Appeal

Four clergymen announced decisions not to appear on the Religious Emphasis Week program Feb. 20-22 at the University of Mississippi and two college professors submitted resignations in protest of the cancellation of an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw to speak there. Chancellor J. D. Williams of Ole Miss cancelled the invitation after the Episcopal minister from Ohio revealed he is a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Decisions not to visit Ole Miss were announced by the Rev. Joseph H. Fichter, sociology professor at Loyola University, New Orleans; the Rev. George Chauncy, Presbyterian minister at Monticello, Ark.; the Rev. Joe Earl Elmore, New York Methodist minister, and Rabbi Milton Grafman of Birmingham.

Dr. Morton B. King Jr., chairman of the Department of Sociology and Anthropology at Ole Miss, announced his resignation, effective at the end of the current school year.

William Buchanan, assistant professor of government at Mississippi State College, resigned in protest of what he called high-level efforts "to screen our thoughts." President Ben Hilbun accepted the resignation and relieved him of his duties immediately.

Parents of 33 Negro children, represented by top Negro lawyers of the NAACP, filed court action at Little Rock asking for an immediate end to segregation in the Arkaknsas capital city's public schools. It was the most significant filing yet made by the NAACP on the integration question in Arkansas.

A suit charging the Hoxie, Ark., School Board with illegal employment and purchasing practices was dismissed at Walnut Ridge, but Chancellor Thomas F. Butt ordered the board to meet promptly with patrons who oppose racial integration in the small town's public schools. The suit was filed last fall by pro-segregationists following a bitter dispute that arose after the board ordered classes integrated.

Rain coupled with a brief hailstorm and a trace of snow competed with brief periods of sunshine on the local weather front last week.

Gift deluge aids needy in Mississippi

HUNDREDS OF POUNDS of candy was sent by the National Committee for Rural Schools, Inc., of New York City. Mrs. Cordie King Brown and friends in Chicago sent $342 and the Grant Memorial AME Church, $373.66.

Thousands of articles of food and clothing were sent by the Emma Lazrus Federation of Jewish Women.

More than 10,000 needy people in Mississippi have received clothing, food, toys, coal or money.

Dr. T. R. M. Howard, president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, in New York City, and Gary, Indiana, has placed $3,000 in escrow at the Tri-State Bank of Memphis, to guarantee a loan to Amzie Moore of Cleveland, Miss. to prevent foreclosure.

The regional council also provided that $2,500 more be placed in escrow at the Tri-State Bank to complete a guarantee of loan of $5,500 to Mr. Moore.

Senator backs Miss. probe

Baltimore, Md.

WASHINGTON — "Frankly I agree with this petition" said Senator William Langer, a member of the subcommittee for Constitutional Rights.

The petition calling for the subcommittee to hold hearings in Mississippi, was presented to Senator Langer Friday by a delegation of 20 persons led by Bishop Edgar A. Love, Methodist Bishop of Baltimore.

Afro-American

IT WAS signed by 2500 persons, from all parts of the country. Bishop Love stated that names of Mississippi signers were omitted for fear of possible revenge.

P. 2

The Rev. W. H. Jernigan, pastor, Mount Carmel Baptist Church, told the Senator "the eyes of the world are upon us, we must take a stand."

JOINING IN the chorus of protest, Aubrey W. Williams, outspoken editor of the Southern Farm and Home, magazine, asked Senator Langer:

"If Kefauver can go to New York, why can't a committee go to Mississippi?

* * *

SENATOR LANGER, addressing the delegation, agreed that government action was necessary to stop terrorism in the South.

"The President" continued the Senator," has time and again pledged himself to the principle of justice for all."

In his closing remarks to the delegation he promised to do "all within his power, to get a complete investigation of Missisippi violence."

Other members of the delegation were:

Mrs. Ethel Clyde, Huntingtpn N. Y.; Mrs. A. J. E. Davis vice president, Council of Church Women, Arlington Va.; the Rev. Charles L. Evans, executive secretary, Allied Baptist Bodies of Virginia, Richmond, Virginia;

Marcus I. Goldman, Ph. D., D. C.; E. B. Henderson, president, NAACP, Virginia; James L. Hupp, W. Va. Weleyan College; the Rev. M. M. L. Perdue, Louisville, Ky;

Mr. and Mrs. Donald Stephens, Wilmington, Del.; Mrs. Andrew Simkins, secretary of the NAACP, Columbia, S. C.; Dr. Lewis S. C. Smythe, professor, College of the Bible, Lexington, Ky., the Rev. Franklin Auld, Methodist, Baltimore, Md.; and Dr. James A. Dombrowski, New Orleans, La.;

Signers of the petition included 316 educators, 124 ministers, rabbis and bishops, 68 physicians and dentists, and 30 attorneys.

and presented a petition bearing the names of 26,000 persons from all 48 states.

The delegation was headed by Bishop Edgar A. Love of the Methodist Church, and included both Negroes and whites.

One white member of the group, Aubrey Williams of Montgomery, Ala., said he wanted to speak as a white Southerner about a "situation in the South which is becoming worse."

He told Langer that the Supreme Court decision on school segregation had "unleashed all the forces of prejudices and hate that had been receding" in recent years.

Bishop Love said that "in the state of Mississippi, a dominant faction is defying the Constitution of the nation, flouting the authority of the Supreme Court, perverting state institutions of justice, condoning the murder of Negro citizens who attempt to exercise their civil rights and driving fair-minded white citzens into frightened silence by economic boycott or the menace of physical violence."

In Mississippi—

Coleman: Segregation peacefully

Birm. Ala.

BY SAM JOHNSON

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 17—(AP)—Gov. J. P. Coleman told his state and the nation today that Mississippi will keep segregation without violence and despite the federal government.

In all history "... there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another," he said in his inaugural address.

"With all due respect to the mighty power of the United States government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done," the 42-year-old governor declared.

He urged the rest of the nation to consider Mississippi's position before passing judgment. "... We are entitled to the sympathetic understanding of our friends in the remainder of the country.

"... THE WHITE people of Mississippi are not a race of Negro killers.

"We ask you to remember that by reason of the numbers involved, this problem is more acute here than in any other state in the nation.

"It is not something which can be viewed with complacency or ignored, and if you lived in Mississippi and knew the full situation, you would look upon it as we do."

Negroes form 45 per cent of Mississippi's population.

The tall, husky governor succeeded Gov. Hugh White.

News + Observer

COLEMAN PREDICTED to a joint session of the Legislature on the Capitol steps that when he ends his term four years from now:

P. 3

"The separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will still be in full force and effect in exactly the same manner and form as we know it today.

"If the rules of racial separation are intact when we leave office, our place in history will be secure.

"If we should fail, there is nothing which will excuse that failure in the eyes of the people of Mississippi."

TURNING TO the nation again, Coleman said, "I want to tell you that during the next four years the full weight of the government will unfailingly be used to the end that Mississippi will be a state of law and not of violence.

"I want to remind you that for over 90 years the white and Negro people of Mississippi have lived side by side in peace and harmony.

TURNING HIS speech to Mississippi Negroes, Coleman asked: "Have you ever thought of the fact that a Negro can attend a mixed school in most ... states, but few of those states will hire him as a teacher?"

He told Negroes if they accepted the opportunity to help themselves with state assistance, "It will mean better days for all of us.

"If you reject it, the responsibility must be yours."

Speaking to white citizens of Mississippi, the new governor declared, "We must keep cool heads and calm judgment in the face of all the provocation which is being hurled upon us from almost every direction.

"The obvious intention of this propaganda is to frighten us, to throw us into panic, to destroy our judgment, and to render us incapable of defending ourselves."

Coleman, one of the youngest governors in Mississippi history, reviewed some of his campaign planks and called for stricter regulation of public utilities, better law enforcement, aid to farmers and fewer pardons and paroles.

He also asked support for repeal of the black market tax on illegal liquor, a constitutional amendment guaranteeing homestead exemptions, now provided by statutes.

KEEP COOL HEADS, MISSISSIPPI URGED BY NEW GOVERNOR

Commercial Appeal P. 1

Coleman Is Confident Of Maintaining Lawful Segregation

MAKES UNITY APPEAL

Memphis, Tenn.

Loyal Negroes Promised Consideration Of Their Problems As Head Of State Takes Office

By KENNETH TOLER

From The Commercial Appeal Jackson, Miss., Bureau

JACKSON, Miss., Jan. 17. — J. P. Coleman became Mississippi's 51st Governor Tuesday, confident that racial segregation will be lawfully maintained during his four-year administration. He was inaugurated on the capitol steps.

The 42-year-old Choctaw Countian called on citizens to "keep cool heads and calm judgment" and in no uncertain words said "the full weight of the government will unfailingly be used to the end that Mississippi will be a state of law and not violence."

Lived Side By Side

Stating that for more than 90 years whites and Negroes have lived side by side in peace and harmony, Governor Coleman said "the great overwhelming majority of the white people are not now guilty and never intend to be guilty of any murder, violence or any other wrong-doing toward anyone."

In a strong appeal for "unity," which he said "must be preserved at all costs," Governor Coleman asked for co-operation of all persons and groups in the effort to preserve segregation.

In a special word to "loyal Negroes unwilling to be made victims of propaganda from professional agitators," he promised "sympathetic consideration to any of your problems which deserve the assistance of the state government."

"If you accept this opportunity, it will mean better days for all of us," the Governor said. "If you reject it, the responsibility must be yours."

Ruling Is Defied

Governor Coleman reminded the Negroes that "there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another."

"And," he added, "with all due respect to the mighty power of the United States Government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done.

"The sentiment of Mississippi is unanimous—so we have nothing to fear unless it be 'fear itself,'" he said.

Then to the "few who have unjustifiably substituted fear for confidence," Governor Coleman, reminded them that "even the United States Supreme Court did not undertake to say how or when its decision of May 17, 1954, could or would be enforced."

On that premise, he reiterated his campaign statement that "there will be no necessity to abolish public schools, nor will there be any mixing of the races in any of the state-operated educational institutions."

Fears No Chaange

"I have not the slightest fear that four years hence when my successor assumes his official oath, the separation of the races in Mississippi will be left intact and will still be in force and effect in exactly the same manner and form as we know it today," Governor Coleman said.

"Let us then exercise all possible soundness of judgment, sincerity of purpose and calmness of mind to the end that we shall not fail."

Without specificably mentioning his controversy with Senator James O. Eastland (D., Miss.) over use of nullification, Governor Coleman said he is in daily contact with other Southern governors and that whatever resolutions the Legislature considers should harmonize with those of the other states.

To Rest Of Nation

Addressing himself "to the remainder of the nation," Governor Coleman said "that while we, the people of Mississippi, are unalterably determined as a matter of right and justice that the necessary rules of society shall be maintained, we do not any more approve of violence and lawlessness than you do.

"We ask you to remember that by reason of the numbers involved, this problem is more acute here than in any other state in the nation," he said. "It is not something which can be viewed with complacency or ignored, and if you lived in Mississippi and knew the full situation, you would look upon it as we do.

'Not Negro Killers'

"Despite all the propaganda which has been fired at us, the country can be assured that the white people of Mississippi are not a race of Negro killers," he added.

Governor Coleman said the 1954-enacted Gore pupil assignment law, not yet challenged, is a complete remedy at the present time to maintain segregation.

Asserting that Mississippi "has not begun to exhaust the resources at our command," Governor Coleman urged the citizens to follow the admonition of Elbert Hubbard: "Go as far as you can see, and when you get there you'll see farther."

"I face the future, not with fear but with confidence, not in panic but in calmness born of the strength of our position and the weight of our power," the new Governor said. "I hope the people, without surrendering any part of their alertness, will join me in this feeling."

Senator Eastland's Strange Contribution

The Louisville Courier-Journal

[Senator Eastland will speak at a meeting of the Montgomery White Citizens Council Feb. 9—Ed.]

COMPARED to Senator James Oliver Eastland, who is justifiably flattered by the comparison, John Caldwell Calhoun was an intellectual giant. There are other differences. Calhoun was a gentleman. His tongue was bitter but his epithets were civilized and his insults were polished. Eastland has called witnesses before Senate hearings a "God-damned son of a bitch" and a "Nigger," and shouted "liar" at an elderly colleague on the Senate floor.

When he could stay clear of his obsession with the virtues of slavery, Calhoun spoke well and debated with dignity and coherence, Eastland models his debating style on those of his fellow senators Knowland and McCarthy, demanding the "ejection" of Russia from the United Nations and the armed defense of Formosa, announcing that the Supreme Court, "as now constituted, is not judicially honest" and declaring—in 1952—that "a state of internal security emergency" existed which called for the round up of between 20,000 and 50,000 "agents of the Kremlin" amongst us, these to be consigned to concentration camps.

Senator Eastland's contributions to our war-time harmony were to proclaim that Negro troops "would neither work nor fight" and to disclose a "mass rape" of German women in a Stattgart subway by Senegalese soldiers with French occupation forces. Undersecretary of War Robert Patterson refuted the first charge; General Devers denied the second after correspondents pointed out: (a) that Stattgart has no subway and (b) that there were no Senegalese with the French occupation forces.

But this is beside the point. We are more concerned with some parallels between Calhoun, upon whom history places much of the blame for the one-way road taken by Southern leaders between 1820 and 1861, and Eastland, who is now loudly demanding that the South return to that same devastated path.

Calhoun, who started as a nationalist and a constitutionalist, came in the end to demand a virtual prohibition of public debate on slavery, that the mails be searched for material opposing it and that the individual states should decide which federal laws to obey and which court decisions were applicable to them. "Nullification" of any act of Congress which displeased any individual state, became a Southern rallying cry and the inevitable end was the Confederacy and the war.

Governor Coleman And The Mississippi Negro

We feel certain that we are joined by the vast majority of the intelligent and responsible Negro citizens of the state in complimenting incoming Governor J. P. Coleman for the admirable restraint with which he spoke regarding the emotionally-packed and highly explosive subjects of segregation, integration, and race-relations in Mississippi, in his inaugural address here Tuesday.

There are still a large number of able and intelligent Negroes in Mississippi of leadership caliber, who have not yet lost their welcome in the councils of authority, who, realizing with the great statesmen, politicians and diplomats of all the ages that compromise is the key to progress, should be willing to take a stand for some compromise plan to reduce the tension and growing hatred and ill-will between the races in the state.

It should be easily discernable to any intelligent observer that the issue between the proponents of total integration and of total segregation have reached a point of ever widening diversion, and unyielding determination.

That the new Governor said in his inaugural address that he was ready to give sympathetic consideration to any problem concerning the Negro citizens of the state that deserves the attention of the state Government is a challenge that should be met by a well organized and well prepared group of intelligent and responsible Negro citizens, imbued with the idea that the concern and progress of the Negro concerns the progress of the entire state, a group to which the Editor and the Jackson Advocate is ready to give one-hundred percent support and cooperation.

MISSISSIPPI PROBE URGED

NEW YORK — The Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights has been urged to conduct an investigation of Mississippi election by the American Civil Liberties Union here.

Negro Says Hate Comes from Top

CAMBRIDGE, Mass., Feb. 16 (AP)—A Mississippi Negro leader said Wednesday night that "poor whites" and Negroes in that state are "played off against each other by the richer whites."

Dr. Theodore R. M. Howard, president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, told a news conference at Harvard university that "The hate is coming from the top and not from the bottom."

He said that Sen. Eastland (D-Miss.) represents the top in Mississippi and is the "greatest threat to American democracy."

Dr. Howard, who speaks at Harvard Thursday night before the Society for Minority Rights, said he was disappointed in the civil rights stands of both Adlai Stevenson and Estes Kefauver (D-Tenn.), candidates for the Democratic presidential nomination.

He said that "direct federal intervention is the only salvation" in the Mississippi civil rights problem.

MISSISSIPPI PLANS A RELIGIOUS WEEK

May Shift Emphasis Now to Discussion of Issues That Disrupted First Program

By MILTON BRACKER

Open discussion at campus meetings of some of the issues that led to the end of Religious Emphasis Week as originally planned at the University of Mississippi now is likely.

The program, an annual feature of life at the university since 1939, was scheduled for Feb. 19-22. All five main speakers and seminar leaders have withdrawn.

Their action stemmed from the previous withdrawal by Chancellor J. D. Williams of the university of an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio.

Mr. Kershaw, an Episcopalian, is a white member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He was to have discussed "Religion and Modern Drama." But he declined to promise that he would not discuss the segregation question if it were raised. That caused Chancellor Williams to cancel his invitation.

Some Programs Is Likely

William Campbell, staff director of religious life for the university, said by phone from there yesterday that "the feeling at this time is that some type of program will be held, using faculty, staff and local ministers to discuss some of our problems and how to reach a solution."

He added that there was already a "great deal of discussion as to the implications of these people withdrawing."

Mr. Campbell emphasized that the actual decision as to the amended character of the meeting, if there was to be one at all, rested with the executive board of the Committee of 100. He said this was an "independent, democratically elected" unit, drawn from members of the faculty, student body and local religious community. The board was due to meet tomorrow night.

While rain pattered on the Mississippi campus—it is at University, across a bridge from the town of Oxford—Mr. Campbell said it was "quite probable" that the very issue that lay behind the Kershaw incident might now be discussed to a degree that might not have been the case had the Ohioan attended.

Last Speaker Withdraws

The sincere efforts of the "little Christian group that's trying to be decent and tolerant" at the University of Mississippi were praised by the final original speaker to withdraw. He was Francis Pickens Miller of Charlottesville, Va., who often has participated in the program in the past.

Mr. Miller, a retired colonel and anti-Byrd leader in Virginia, said he had been concerned lest the incident and the withdrawals might cause that little group to "suffer." But, after talking to old friends at Mississippi, he wired his withdrawal to Mr. Campbell yesterday.

His telegram expressed deep regret, adding that he had been forced to the conclusion that "the Christian cause will be better served" by his not attending. Mr. Miller said he was "distressed beyond measure" at the situation.

Here in New York, the Kershaw-Mississippi case and its implications will be discussed today by another of the five who withdrew from the Religious Emphasis program.

He is the Rev. Joe Earl Elmore, assistant minister of the Methodist Church of St. Paul and St. Andrew, Eighty-sixth Street and West End Avenue. At the request of the minister, the Rev. Barber L. Waters, Mr. Elmore will speak in the chapel at noon, after the regular morning worship. From 1952-4, Mr. Elmore was director of the Methodist student foundation at Mississippi.

Mississippi Roundup—

House OKs Segregation Bills On Waiting Rooms

Post-Herald Sat. 1-28-56 P. 12

Birmingham

JACKSON, Jan. 27 (AP) — Negroes will not use white waiting rooms and toilet facilities in railroad and bus stations, the Mississippi House of Representatives said today in three bills which received unanimous votes.

Parts of the bills apply to all passengers, whether interstate or intrastate.

Ala.

The bills seek to wipe out the recent Interstate Commerce Commission order requiring integrated waiting rooms for interstate passengers—those traveling across state lines.

The Senate now must act on the bills. Passage there virtually is certain. The bills received votes of 104-0, 103-0 and 104-0 in the House.

The bills give support to action of some city officials in Mississippi when the ICC order went into effect Jan. 10. In Jackson, police put up their own signs after Illinois Central Railroad officials obeyed the ICC order and removed segregation signs.

Officials of several other cities said they would do the same thing if necessary.

Persons entering a waiting room or rest room marked for the other race could be fined $1000 and sent to jail for one year under the bills passed today.

Railroad and bus companies which fail or refuse to provide segregated waiting and rest rooms for intrastate passengers could be fined $1000 a day. The state also could get an injunction requiring them to provide such facilities.

"Any time a colored man enters a white rest room, he is (would be) guilty of a misdemeanor," declared Rep. Luther Simms of Lowndes County. If an interstate passenger comes in there (wrong room), he's guilty.

One of the bills also seeks to protect officers and railroad and bus company employes who enforce segregation in compliance with the proposed new laws. It would deny a person the right to sue the officers or employes for damages for false arrest.

of an intensive 10-day search last Summer when his plane went down in North Pacific waters near Japan.

Marine 2nd Lt. David Winston Bell, of Minnesota, also was presumed lost in the accident. No trace ever was found of the wreckage.

Montague is survived by his widow; a son and a sister, Mrs. Betty Nell Montague, all of Jackson.

Mississippi U. Calls Off Talks On Religion

Courier Journal Wed. 2-15-56 P. 3

Kershaw Controversy Causes Cancellation

Louisville, Ky.

University, Miss., Feb. 14 (AP) —The University of Mississippi today called off its Religious Emphasis Week after five ministers suggested the "Kershaw incident" had ruined the religious atmosphere of the program.

The five also canceled their speaking engagements for the program next week, saying:

". . . We feel the excitement engendered throughout this controversy would make it difficult to maintain an atmosphere in which real religious values could be given proper consideration."

The executive committee of the Committee of 100, which handles the program, substituted a 30-minute period of silent prayer and meditation next Monday, Tuesday, and Wednesday.

Giving to N.A.A.C.P.

The controversy began when the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio, a former Louisvillian, a key speaker, announced plans last summer to donate part of his television-quiz-show winnings to the National Association for The Advancement of Colored People.

Last month he wrote Chancellor J. D. Williams that he was a member of the N.A.A.C.P. and would speak on segregation if the question arose. He was scheduled to speak on "Religion and Drama."

Williams revoked the invitation.

Then five out-of-state ministers canceled their speaking engagements. A university sociology professor and a Mississippi State College government professor resigned in protest against what they called an abridgment of freedom of speech.

Senators Asked to Hold Mississippi Rights Probe

Post & Times Herald Washington, D.C. Sat. 2-4-56 P. 15

Associated Press

A biracial delegation of 20 from nine Southern states yesterday asked that the Senate Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights to held hearings in Mississippi as soon as possible.

Headed by Methodist Bishop Edgar A. Love, Baltimore, the delegation, presented petitions to Sen. William Langer (R-N. D.), Republican member of the Subcommittee, urging the hearings.

Love, a Negro, said the petitions were signed by some 26,000 residents of the 48 states.

Love told Langer that in Mississippt, a "dominant faction is defying the Constitution of the Nation, flouting the authority of the Supreme Court, perverting State institutions of justice, condoning the murder of Negro citizens who attempt to exercise their civil rights, and driving fair minded white citizens into frightened silence by economic boycott or the menace of physical violence."

Aubrey Williams, Montgomery, Ala., a member of the delegation, said he wanted to speak as a white southerner about a "situation in the South which is becoming worse."

He said the Supreme Court decision banning school segregation had "unleashed all the forces of prejudices and hate that had been receding" in recent years.

Many whites in the South, Williams said, are back of the Supreme Court decision but hesitate to speak out.

"What we need is for the Committee to come down and get the story," he said. "If congress can send a Committee to New York to investigate crime, why not to Mississippi where basic laws are flouted and lives threatened."

Langer complimented the group and said he would present the petition to the Judiciary Committee.

Clergymen give up on 'Ole Miss.'

Hero-American Baltimore, Md. Sat. 2-18-56

UNIVERSITY, Miss. — Clergymen from three major faiths cancelled speaking engagements at the University of Mississippi for Religious Emphasis Week in the wake of the "Kershaw incident."

Two Protestant ministers, a rabbi ,and a Catholic priest withdrew acceptance of speaking invitations because the university revoked its invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw of Oxford, Ohio, and Episcopal minister and member of the NAACP.

The first to withdraw was the Rev. Joseph Fichter, sociologist at Loyola University, New Orleans, La.

JOINING HIM, Friday, were the Rev. George Chancey, pastor, First Presbyterian Church, Monticello, Ark.; the Rev. Joe Earl Elmore of NYC; and Rabbi Milton Frafman, Temple Emmanuel at Birmingham, Ala.

Two members of the faculty, Dr. Morton King Jr., head of the university's sociology department, and Dr. William D. Buchanan, assistant professor of government resigned in earlier protests against action in the Kershaw case.

The Rev. Mr. Kershaw, a jazz enthusiast, won $32,000 in the television show "The $64,000 Question."

He became a center of a campus controversy when he let it be known that he intended to contribute part of the money to the NAACP.

HOWARD 'MISTAKEN' ABOUT LOAN CHARGE

Clarksdale Negro Undertaker Given $5,000 By Union

Special to The Commercial Appeal

CLARKSDALE, Miss., Feb. 13. —R. L. Drew, a Negro undertaker, said Monday that Dr. T. R. M. Howard was "mistaken" when the Mound Bayou Negro physician told a New York audience that a Clarksdale bank had threatened to foreclose on a home loan if Drew did not repay the loan at once.

Memphis

A drug employes union after an address by Dr. Howard granted a loan of $5,000 to Drew.

Dr. Howard, speaking at the annual Negro history week celebration of the Drug Employes Local 1199 of the retail, wholesale and department store workers, said the Coahoma County Bank & Trust Co. here threatened to foreclose on a $3,000 loan on Drew's home it he did not repay at once. The Negro physician attributed the bank's action to "economic pressures" advocated by white Citizens Councils.

"I was denied a $300 loan three months ago, and was told a bank official that the denial was because of my activities for integration," Drew said Monday. "But I still owe $2,000 on the home loan, and no notice has been given me that I must repay at once.

"Dr. Howard probably assumed that I would get such notices because I had been denied the smaller loan," added Drew, 59-year-old owner of Royal Funeral Home. "I'm making no howl about being denied the small loan."

Drew said a white friend loaned him the needed $300.

R. E. McInnis, cashier at the bank, Monday would not deny that Drew had been denied the loan because of his stand against segregation.

Drew, a close friend of Dr. Howard, was chairman of the Clarksdale chapter of the NAACP when signed a petition for integrated schools here several months ago. He is now vice president of the chapter.

He said he will use $5,000 loan to pay off the mortgage on his home. The remainder will be use dto pay off smaller debts, he said.

Loyola Sociology Professor Won't Be In Religious Education Week

Special to The Commercial Appeal

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 6.—A sociology professor at Loyola University of the South informed authorities here Monday he will not appear on the University's Religious Emphasis Week program because of the withdrawal of an invitation to the Rev. Alvin Kershaw.

The Rev. Joseph Sicther of New Orleans told the Rev. James Brett, pastor of St. John's Catholic Church here, by telephone he would not appear.

Refuses In Protest

"He said his refusal to speak was in protest against the University's attitude in general regarding segregation, and in particular regarding the withdrawal of the invitation to the Rev. Mr. Kershaw," said the Rev. Mr. Brett.

Memphis

A letter from the Rev. Mr. Sicther saying he will not appear was mailed Monday to the Rev. William Campbell, director of religious life at the YMCA on the Ole Miss campus, said the Rev. Mr. Brett, who is chaplain of Catholic students at Ole Miss.

'Would Be Unwise'

The Rev. Mr. Kershaw, of Oxford, Ohio, was told last week by Chancellor J. D. Williams that his scheduled visit here the week of Feb. 19 "would be unwise." The advice came after the Episcopal minister revealed he was a member of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

A controversy flared over the Rev. Mr. Kershaw's scheduled appearance after he reportedly said he would donate part of $32,000 won on a television quiz show to the NAACP.

GOVERNOR COLEMAN REAFFIRMS STAND AGAINST INTEGRATION IN TUESDAY'S INAUGURAL ADDRESS

Hattiesburg

Say More Whites Killed By Negroes Than Negroes By Whites In State

Jackson, Miss.

Promises Sympathetic Consideration Of Problems Of Negroes Which Deserve Attention Of State Government

A man with a story-book career in Mississippi politics, Attorney General J. P. Coleman took the helm as the new Governor of the state in Inaugural ceremonies here Tuesday, backed by the ringing praise and endorsement of his predecessor Governor Hugh White, one of the few men in the state's history who was twice elected to the state's highest office.

Only a few Negroes could be seen on the fringes of the crowd estimated at some 4,000 which came from every section of the state to hear him deliver his inaugural address from a new platform built in front of the South entrance of the New Capitol Building.

Sat 1-21-56

After touching upon the general and ordinary affairs of the state, the new Governor re-affirmed his stand against integration of the public schools concerning which he said:

"With all due respect to the mighty power of the United States government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done .. Our pupil assignment law, which has been on the statute books since 1954, and which has not yet been challenged, is, in my opinion, within itself, a complete remedy at the present time ... There is no occasion for the excitement of fear."

Hattiesburg

Although a number of other southern states appeared to be planning to move ahead immediately on the subject, notably Virginia, Georgia, and South Carolina, the new Governor seemed less enthusiastic over the matter of interposition, concerning which he said:

"We have plenty of time. You will be kept fully informed of all developments. So I respectfully request that all action of this kind be withheld until you shall have heard my special message" to be delivered on this subject at a later date.

Revealing his concern with the continued criticism the state is receiving as a result of well known recent incidents the new Governor said:

With the indulgence of those present, I should like now to address a word to the remainder of the nation. I want to tell you that during the next four years the full weight of the government will unfailingly be used to the end that Mississippi will be a state of law and not of violence.

I want to remind you that for over 90 years the white and the Negro people of Mississippi have lived side by side in peace and harmony. I would like you, our friends outside Mississippi, to know that the great overwhelmingly majority of the white people of Mississippi are not now guilty and never intend to be guilty of any murder, violence, or any other wrongdoing toward anyone.

History shows that the first white man ever to be legally hanged in Mississippi was executed for the murder of a Negro slave.

I repeat that while we, the people of Mississippi, are unalterably determined as a matter of right and justice that the necessary rules of society shall be maintained, we do not any more approve of violence and lawlessness than you do.

We ask you to remember that by reason of the number involved, this problem is more acute here than in any other state in the union. It is not something which can be viewed with complacency or ignored, and if you lived in Mississippi and knew the full situation, you would look upon it as we do.

Despite all the propaganda which has been fired at us, the country can be asured that the white people of Mississippi are not a race of Negro killers. Official statistics for the state of Mississippi for 1954 show that in that year, the last for which we have figures available, eight white people were killed by Negroes and only six Negroes were killed by whites, while 182 Negroes were killed by members of their own race. In other words, there are 30 times as many Negroes killed by members of their own race as by members of the white race.

Now, for a word to those loyal Negro citizens of Mississippi who love their state and who are unwilling to be made the victims of propaganda from professional agitators.

I must remind you that when one searches the entire history of all nations, peoples, governments, and minority populations there will be found examples of extinctions, enslavements, torture, and exile, but there cannot be found one single instance where a government has forced one race against its will to integrate with another.

With all due respect to the mighty power of the United States Government, it will never be able to force racial integration in Mississippi nor in any other state where the people are unwilling to have it done.

What have integrated schools in other sections been worth to the Negro? Have you ever thought about the fact that a Negro can attend a mixed school in most of those states, but few of those states will hire him as a teacher? The State of Connecticut does not have 25 Negro teachers. The City of Albany, the capital of New York, the home of Harlem, employs only three Negro teachers. The city of Newark employs 2200 school teachers, but only 70 of them are Negroes, and none is a principal.

I am pledged to the maintenance of the separation of the races at all costs, but I want to say this further word to the Negroes of Mississippi. As Governor, I shall always give sympathetic consideration to any of your problems which deserve the assistance of the state government.

If you accept this opportunity, it will mean better days for all of us. If you reject it, the responsibility must be yours.

The address was concluded with remarks on the subject of segregation and integration directed to the white people of the state during which he re-affirmed his campaign statements in regard to the subjects, and by pointing out that present state laws are adequate to meet conditions of the present.

Negroes generally were all but unanimous in saying that the speech carried a much better tone than most had expected because of present conditions of race relations in the state.

All Out-of-State Ministers Cancel Trips to Ole Miss

Times Picayune

New Orleans, La.

Reject Invitations Over 'Kershaw Incident'

Sat. 2-11-56

UNIVERSITY, Miss., Feb. 10 (AP)—Three more ministers Friday cancelled their scheduled appearances for the University of Mississippi's Religious Emphasis Week over the "Kershaw incident."

The cancellations wiped out the slate of out-of-state clergymen who were scheduled to speak on the campus Feb. 19-22.

A Catholic priest from New Orleans said earlier this week he would not appear.

The clergymen who said Friday they will not appear:

The Rev. George Chauncey, pastor of the First Presbyterian Church, Monticello, Ark.

The Rev. Joe Earl Elmore of New York City, former director of Methodist student work at the University of Mississippi.

Rabbi Milton Grafmon, Temple Emanuel, Birmingham, Ala.

Committee to Meet

The University of Mississippi committee which sponsors Religious Emphasis Week will meet Monday to decide whether to continue its efforts to put on the program.

The university withdrew the invitation extended the Rev. Alvin Kershaw because the Episcopal minister from Oxford, Ohio, is a member of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

Earlier this week, the Rev. Fr. Joseph Fichter, S. J., a sociology professor at Loyola University of the South in New Orleans, said he would not appear on the program.

The university's student newspaper, the Mississippian, commended Chancellor J. D. Williams Friday on his withdrawal of Kershaw's invitation.

The newspaper's editorial was entitled "He didn't Let Us Down."

Incident Reviewed

The "Kershaw incident" began when the minister, also an expert on jazz music, won $32,000 on the television program "The $64,000 Question." He said he might give part of the winnings to the NAACP.

That brought a demand from several state officials that his invitation, given some time earlier, be withdrawn.

The college board, which controls all of Mississippi's state-supported colleges, left the final decision to Chancellor Williams with the recommendation that the minister be allowed to speak.

Kershaw was scheduled to speak on "Religion and Drama."

A short time later, the minister said in a letter to the university newspaper he would answer any questions on segregation students asked during his stay at the university.

The chancellor then withdrew the invitation.

Racial Crisis

Dear Sirs:

As a lifelong citizen of Mississippi I want to thank you for publishing the wonderful article by Hodding Carter [RACIAL CRISIS IN THE DEEP SOUTH, Dec. 17] . . . Carter has reported the facts so objectively and so clearly that anyone with an open mind can see the prejudice evident on both sides of the question. . . .

The South is going to have to rise again. We are being persecuted and ridiculed and pushed around, and we don't like it any more than any other American does. . . .

MRS. WALTER L. MCKEE
Ripley, Miss.

Dear Sirs:

Hodding Carter . . . has succeeded in putting down in black and white the twisted, perverted, racially angled, reactionary ideas of the too-long decadent, decrepit, all but dead South. . . . Carter has proved why the Negro does not have a chance in the South. . . .

LAWRENCE D. FAULKNER
Cincinnati, Ohio

Dear Sirs:

. . . The Supreme Court decision can bring nothing but bloodshed on a scale never before seen in our land, and before it happens the court will have to put troops in every classroom.

JAMES E. BURNS, JR.
New Orleans, La.

Dear Sirs:

I wonder what Mr. Hodding Carter . . . did besides mere "rabble-rousing." He is evidently soliciting pity rather than condemnation. . . .

GLENN FLINCHBAUGH
Hamburg, Pa.

Dear Sirs:

. . . It was inherent and inescapable, from the day the white man in his greed introduced the first black slave into America, that a dreadful retribution was in store for him, and retribution almost without end, as someday there will be fifty million Negroes here, not fifteen. What then? . . .

A. BAXTER
Santa Monica, Cal.

Dear Sirs:

. . . Mr. Carter should have included in his ample report on fears the more hopeful side represented by the active and successful efforts of churches and other organizations to get people of both races to work out together a sane solution of their problems. For example, the Southern Regional Council in Atlanta and its affiliate state organizations, such as the Texas Commission on Race Relations, certainly have demonstrated this formula. . . .

I predict Mississippi will meet its unique challenge and become a model of interracial love in our lifetime. Southerners are basically too kind and polite to let meanness get out of hand.

EDITOR SAYS TIME TO EASE RACE SPAT

Carter Sees Improvement In Negro Dispersal

NEW YORK, March 8.—(UP) — Hodding Carter, editor and publisher of the Delta Democrat-Times at Greenville, Miss., said Thursday he sees no immediate solution to the racial dispute which racks the South, especially in the areas of heaviest Negro concentration.

In an interview by Dave Garroway on NBC-TV's "Today" show, Mr. Carter said he believed the situation would improve in time if the current dispersal of the Negro from heavily populated areas continues. Time, he said, is "The only specific way out."

"I see no solution," Mr. Carter said, "but I do see amelioration through one, the realization by the Negroes that the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People does not have all the answers, and the realization by the Southern whites that the violent extremes of the organized groups is not the answer either."

Mr. Carter said he foresaw "violent forcible reactions" in certain areas of the South where tensions are the strongest. But he said he believed the "critical area could be bridged" in other areas depending upon the leadership on both sides. If this leadership fails, "You are going to have boycott fighting boycott before very long," he added.

Grant Reynolds Blasts Dixie Editor

Courier Sat. 1-28-56 P.6

Hodding Carter Called 'Overrated Southerner'

Pittsburgh, Pa.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y.—In a letter to the editors of The Courier, Atty. Grant Reynolds offers a blistering commentary denouncing writer James Desmond's "effort to make an equalitarian out of Hodding Carter."

Mr. Reynolds, who ran for Congress against Adam Clayton Powell in New York several years ago, refers to an article which appeared in The Courier Jan. 14, by-lined by Mr. Desmond under the head "Editor Leads War Against Kluxers!"

Mr. Reynolds

Hodding Carter is editor-owner of the Delta Democrat Times, published in Greenville, Miss.

Lashing out vehemently at Desmond's appraisal of Carter, Reynolds called the editor " . . . the most overrated Southerner of our times."

In the article in The Courier, Desmond writes that Carter uses front page editorials to slam at the economic sanctions of the White Citizens Councils. "Yet Carter is no desegregationist," Desmond states.

ATTORNEY REYNOLDS maintains that "a Southerner can be against both the Ku Klux Klan and the WCC and remain as opposed to conformity with the Supreme Court's interpretation of the U. S. Constitution as Governor Griffin of Georgia.

"I have read Hodding Carter's books and all of his magazine articles since 1944," Reynolds continues, "In none of them has he the honesty to state that the current tension in Mississippi is historically rooted in a misguided and bigoted political leadership using scientifically discredited myths with which to exploit both Negroes and poor whites.

"This man differs from the other opponents of desegregation only in terms of his opposition to violence and restrictions on the citizen's constitutional rights to the franchise."

REYNOLDS HIT at Carter's inferences that the NAACP is to blame for the current breakdown of law and order in his state and charges him with a form of subversion in advocating a philosophy entirely alien to democracy.

"Hodding Carter," charges Reynolds, "chooses to be silent in his articles that respect for law is an American heritage—that ours is a land of laws and not men."

In a final statement aimed at what he calls Desmond's "glorification" of Hodding Carter, Reynolds concludes, "Let us . . . save our halos for the Judge Warings and the Dr. Howards, all Southerners, but stalwart defenders of the American dream who warrant our adoration."

Carter Says Integration Far Off

Defender P.3
Sat. 10-20-56
Chicago, Ill.

PRINCETON, N. J. — (INS) — Pulitzer prize-winning publisher Hodding Carter of Mississippi told some 200 Princeton students last week that "integration won't be complete in 50 years" in the South.

Carter who publishes the Greenville, Miss., Delta Democrat-Times also claimed that "as of now, the Citizen's Councils are not dangerous," and although they are "not powerful as they were a year ago, they will continue to exist in the background for a long time to come."

Speaking in Whig Auditorium on the topic "Role of Man of Letters in Public Affairs," Carter foresaw a "reduction of the number of people against (integration) and a narrowing of the gap between the two cultures."

NO VIOLENCE

He said in the fight for integration, "there may be local strife, but no real violence, and I can't see the use of force to accomplish integration."

He continued, "The North should not leave the South alone at all in this question. We should realize that this is a problem and one that all sections of the country should share."

Carter, who has published the prize-winning Delta Democrat-Times for 25 years, claimed, "a lot of things have changed in the newspaper world" except what he called the laxity of public officials and the need for new interests

Eastland Made Head of Judiciary Unit

Post & Times Herald 8/1 Sat. 3-3-56

Senate Adheres To Its Seniority Rule In Approving Motion

Washington, D.C.

By Robert C. Albright
Staff Reporter

Sen. James O. Eastland (D-Miss.) leading critic of the Supreme Court's school integration ruling, was approved by the Senate yesterday as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee despite the sharp protests of two colleagues.

In so doing, the Senate adhered once again to its traditional "seniority" rule, advancing Senators in committee rank according to their years of service.

To no avail Senators Wayne Morse (D-Ore.) and Herbert H. Lehman (D-N.Y.) urged the Senate to forget seniority in this instance because of Eastland's "partiality" on the segregation issue and some of his recent activities and statements.

By a voice vote, with only a few "noes," audible, the 51-year-old Eastland, a member of the Senate for 15 years, was advanced to the powerful chairmanship recently left vacant by the death of Sen. Harley M. Kilgore (D-W.Va.).

Sen. Earle C. Clements (Ky.), acting Senate majority leader, made the motion that Eastland be named to the post, saying that as ranking Democrat he had been recommended by the Senate Democratic Steering Committee.

Senate Republican Leader William F. Knowland (Calif.) went along with the appointment, saying it is the responsibility of Democrats to fill their own committee posts. Otherwise there would be "chaos," Knowland said.

Morse said he was not questioning Eastland's right to sit in the Senate, but he was opposing his promotion to the Judiciary chairmanship because of his attacks on the Court in the integration matter and his effort to get Southerners to defy the ruling.

D.C.

He noted that Eastland favors the interposition doctrine Southern leaders are using to fight the decision. Said Morse: "I hold to hte proposition that this country cannot survive if we return to the nullification doctrine of Calhoun. . . . Interposition is nothing but nullification in disguise."

Post & Times Herald

Morse also cited newspaper reports that Eastland opposed confirmation of the Presidents' appointment of Solicitor General Simon E. Sobeloff of Maryland to the Federal Circuit Court of Appeals. He noted that as Judiciary chairman Eastland would have great "influence" in passing on judicial nominations and other matters affecting the Federal judiciary. He said Eastland was quoted as taking note of the fact that Sobeloff favored integration in the schools. Morse said he hopes the Senate has not reached the point where a nominee is passed over because he "holds to the position of the Supreme Court."

The Oregon Democrat quoted Eastland as referring to the Supreme Court as "incompetent" on the floor of the Senate, and as having charged it was "indoctrinated and brainwashed by left wing pressure.

Morse further quoted from a speech attributed to Eastland, made in Mississippi during his last campaign for the Senate, in which Eastland talked about his job as chairman of the Civil Rights Subcommittee of the Judiciary Committee, in 1951 and later.

He quoted Eastland as saying: "And ever since then the CIO and these organizations have been yapping and yapping that I was arrogant and high hatted with them, and so I was; they said I broke the law, and so I did.

"You know, the laws says the committee has got to meet once a week; and there I was chairman of the committee, and there were Northerners up there, Yankees, that didn't know anything about the question, who were lined up against us. Do you know what happened? Why, for the three years I was chairman that committee didn't hold a meeting."

Sen. Lehman followed Morse with a charge that Eastland is "a symbol of racism in America" and "a symbol of defiance to the Constitution."

Said Lehman: "Sen. Eastland is precluded by philosophy, conviction and activities from presiding over the Senate Judiciary Committee as chairman in an impartial way."

Eastland Urges Control at Neshoba Fair

8-10-56

By DOUGLAS STARR

PHILADELPHIA, Miss., Aug. 9 (AP)—Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss.) said Thursday the South must control congressional machinery because "we are not going to get a presidential candidate to take the stand we desire."

Eastland addressed thousands of central Mississippians at the 67th annual Neshoba county fair, one of the nation's oldest campground fairs and a "battleground" for governmental philosophy.

Eastland said it is "important that the vice president be an honest man . . . because he should interpret the rules of the Senate as they should be."

The senator spoke immediately after Mississippi Secretary of state Heber Ladner. Ladner called upon Democrats to nominate Gen. Matthew Ridgway, a Southerner, for vice-president.

Congressional Rule Cited

Eastland said it is only by congressional rule that Southerners "have been able to fight off the onslaught of our opponents" in Washington.

He said the south has "greatly prospered" because the Southerners in Congress have warded off attacks. The state's senior senator said opponents have made progress only through judical interpretation of the laws and the US constitution.

"Tides have been running against the Southern people," Eastland said. "But for the past year the tide is turning because we (the South) have stood firm against those who would harm us."

Segregation Aired

On segregation, the senator said:

"If we can prevent gradual integration in certain Southern states, we will win a tremendous victory. I think that will be done."

He listed the border states as Florida, Tennessee, North Carolina and western Arkansas, saying "each state evidenced gradual erosion and infiltration of racial integration."

Eastland said a special session of the Virginia Legislature is scheduled within two weeks to consider a plan for preventing school integration in that state.

Eastland described the plan as "providing for pupil assignments under control of the governor on the theory that a contempt citation cannot reach a governor in the discharge of his duties."

Mississippi Has Pupil Law

Mississippi has a pupil assignment law but it is not under the control of the governor. It is under the control of the state department of education and the school districts.

The senator described the US foreign aid program and added: "American farmers were sacrificed and have borne the brunt of our foolish, silly foreign-aid program."

Ladner said "I would like to see a Southerner nominated for vice-president."

The state official said Gen. Ridgway, a southerner from Virginia, would be able to "pull in millions of voters who today recognize the United States in losing the cold war with communism."

Would Assure Victory

Times Picayune

Ridgway's nomination "would be a natural in assuring Democratic victory in November," Ladner said, "and would bring great prestige to the party both at home and abroad."

New Orleans, La.

He said the general "no doubt would serve a good purpose in bringing solidarity to the party."

Ladner blasted any idea of a two-party system in Mississippi, saying "in my judgment, under the circumstances, this would be fatal" because the Natl Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People would control politics in 12 to 15 counties and put pressure on the governor's office.

Sen. Earl Evans of Canton, speaking at the fair Wednesday, disapproved of Adlai Stevenson as a presidential candidate but said he probably would be nominated.

Evans urged that the state Democratic convention be recalled and name two slates of electors, one pledged to the party nominee and the other to an unnamed states' rights candidate. He said this would give Mississippians a chance to cast a conscientious vote without endangering their standings as Democrats.

If enough states do this, said the president pro tem of the state Senate, the presidential election could be thrown into the U.S. House of Representatives where each state has but one vote.

The state senator said the South could not possibly receive help from either national political party as a result of the presidential election.

Ladner blasted the Republican party, saying President Eisenhower "broke faith" with the voters by trying to "make vassals of all the states."

He said Eisenhower implied before he was elected that he was for states' rights, local self-government and farmers.

Instead, Ladner charged, Eisenhower set up a Civil Rights Commission with authority to attempt to mold thought and action of a sovereign people.

In addition, Ladner said, Eisenhower "catered to the whims and designs of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People in sponsoring such diabolical legislation."

Says Ike 'Misled' Farmers

He said Eisenhower "misled" farmers by promising 100 per cent of parity for farm commodities and advocating 75 per cent as soon as he was in office.

The state official said the South "has definitely lost the executive and judicial branches of government" and must keep control of the nine standing Senate committees and 12 standing House committees.

Evans also objected to a two-party system in Mississippi, saying it would result in both parties wooing the Negro vote.

Barnett Speaks

The senator said if the nominee of neither national party is acceptable to the South, "the only way to prevent a split in the (state) party is to make adequate provision for . . . permitting a Mississippi Democrat to vote for any candidate of his choice in a presidential election without affecting his status as a Democrat."

Ross Barnett, twice a loser in running for governor, told the fair crowd that Southern delegations to the Democratic national convention should each support a favorite son to "give the South an opportunity to present . . . our side of the picture" to the nation via radio, television and newspapers.

Barnett said Adlai Stevenson's support of the supreme court integration ruling is no surprise "to those of us who know the feeling and purpose of the political opportunist." He said Stevenson has said "on all occasions that we must integrate" and said the former Illinois governor is not an acceptable presidential candidate.

The Jackson attorney, criticizing Gov. J. P. Coleman, said the governor "is not furnishing us with a positive, forceful, straightforward leadership so badly needed in Mississippi.

Eastland Claims Sentiment Changing, Cites School Situation In Capital

Memphis Tenn.

"Rebellious feeling" among Washington residents is making school integration in the nation's capital a "deplorable situation," Mississippi's senior senator declared in Memphis yesterday.

Senator James O. Eastland, en route to Washington after taking his family to his Doddsville, Miss., home for the summer, said letters his office has received from throughout the nation convinces him the South "is gaining ground—public sentiment is turning in our favor."

8-18-56

Nation Better Informed

He attributed the change to increased publicity which Negro bids for integration have brought, leading to a nation which is better informed on the Negro-white problem.

"People are beginning to realize that we're not mistreating the Negro in the South. And they're realizing we can make more progress with separate (educational) institutions."

He also said a "Supreme Court which has gone too far in protecting communists" has created a public sentiment favorable to the South.

GOP Strategy Scored

Commenting on a Republican strategy to discourage Northern

Negroes from voting for Democrats—claiming a vote for Northern Democrats is a vote for Southern "race baiters"—Senator Eastland declared. "The Republican Party is willing to destroy our system of government to cater to pressure groups." Among those groups, he said are the NAACP, CIO and Americans for Democratic Action.

An Episcopal minister from Mississippi served notice as the Democratic convention got underway this week that he will wage a fight to prevent the seating of the regular Mississippi delegation, which he charges is controlled by Sen. James O. Eastland.

Dr. Charles G. Hamilton, a former newspaper reporter, heads what he calls the "true Democratic delegation" and has declared that the state's Democratic organization "is a conspiracy to violate the Constitution."

Hamilton, who was scheduled to testify before the national convention's credentials committee, charges that the Coleman delegation is controlled by Eastland and Walter Sillers, speaker of the state house of representatives.

"The Eastland-Sillers group even includes persons who at this very time are indicating publicly their support either for President Eisenhower on the Republican ticket or an independent third party candidate," Hamilton said.

He told reporters that the July convention of the Mississippi Democratic party required that any one voting in the Democratic primary must declare under oath his support of the principle of segregation.

Defender

"Pressure is much worse in Mississippi now than it was when I fought the Ku Klux Klan and the Dixiecrats," Hamilton said. "I am not making public the names of our delegates because I want them to keep their jobs back home a few days longer."

This marks the third straight year that Hamilton has tried to get his delegation seated at the convention.

He said that if Democrats are to win votes away from the Republicans this year they must abandon links with Eastland.

Dr. Hamilton has been serving churches in Northeast Mississippi for 29 years and was named Mississippi "Minister of the Year" in 1953. He is said to be the only white Mississippian with an honorary degree from a Negro college.

Former chairman of the elections committee in the Mississippi House under three governors, author of the soldier voting and free textbook laws of his state, he was a delegate to the 1940 National Democratic convention and has been active in all conventions since then, acting as one of the spokesmen for the 1952 contestants.

He is on the staff of the Christian Century, a Chicago Protestant weekly, of the Chicago Jewish Forum, and contributed to the new Jesu-Maria parochial school textbooks of the Catholic Archdiocese of Chicago.

South Is Making Steady Headway, Eastland Declares

Herald P.3-a

STARKVILLE, Miss. —(AP)— Sen. James Eastland, Mississippi Democrat, says he believes well-financed propaganda favors integration nationally, but that the South "is making headway."

Wed. 9-19-56

Eastland, addressing the Oktibbeha County Farm Bureau Federation, said if the South can stand united, "it can preserve our heritage."

Miami, Fla.

Mississippi's senior senator said "the great danger is the precedent just set by Kentucky and Tennessee where state police power has been used to enforce the integration decision of the U. S. Supreme Court."

The National Guards of both states were called out to prevent violence in integrated white schools.

"The hope for the South," Eastland said, "is in following the example of Gov. Allen Shivers of Texas who used the police power to preserve segregation in education in order to prevent riots and disorders."

The move is legal, Eastland said, because segregation is only prohibited if based solely upon race.

Eastland reviewed some of his actions in the Senate Judiciary Committee, saying he prevented the submission of civil rights legislation backed by the Eisenhower administration.

Many times, he said, he avoided calling a meeting of the committee, of which he is chairman, and many times appointed himself chairman of each subcommittee called to consider each judge named to federal benches.

"In time," he continued, "there was so much pressure built up from various members of the committee who wanted to get their nominees approved, that I was able to get the Judiciary Committee to approve or reject bills and to name judges I wanted."

He said such power and advantages stem from Southern seniority in Congress.

"Lacks Impartiality"

Mississipian To Head Civil Rights Controlling Judiciary

BY WILLIAM THEIS

WASHINGTON — (INS) — The Senate overwhelmingly approved Friday the appointment of Sen. James O. Eastland (D) Miss., as Senate Judiciary Chairman in the face of protests that he "lacks impartiality" on the segregation issue.

By a voice vote, in which only a few "noes" were heard, the Senate upheld its tradition of seniority in promotion of Senators and affirmed Eastland's right to the chairmanship. He succeeds the late Sen. Harleynkilgore (D) W. Va.

Negative votes were registered by Sens' Wayne Morse (D) Ore., and Herbert Lehman (D) N. Y., who challenged the property of giving Eastland the job.

Morse opened the drive against Eastland. Morse said he opposed Eastland's appointment because of the Mississippi Democrat's demand that all Southerners defy the Supreme Court's ruling declaring public school segregation unconstitutional.

Lehman followed by charging that Eastland is now a "symbol of racism" and a "symbol of defiance of the Supreme Court."

But the Mississippian was defended by his colleague, Sen. John Stennis (D) Miss., who argued that Eastland was entitled to the chairmanship by his long tenure and had shown "moderation" in his speeches on the race question.

The Morse-Lehman move was doomed from the start because Eastland's promotion had the support of both Democratic and Republican leaders.

Stennis, a Senator highly regarded for his legal ability, said of Eastland: "He has always cautioned and counseled legal approaches, lawful procedure and orderly conduct."

Stennis defended the Southern organization of white citizens' councils' active since the Supreme Court Anti-Segregation decision. He said it is to these organizations that "many of our colored leaders go for guidance" because they are "confused" by outside influences.

Stennis said the councils "largely represent the constructive, patient, understanding leadership" of white residents of the Southern states who, he said, have been working for 100 years to improve race relations.

Stennis commended both Morse and Lehman for their "impersonal" treatment of the chairmanship issue.

WASHINGTON

"Who shot you?"

This was the question asked Gus Courts by Senator James O. Eastland. The meeting was in the senator's office, Tuesday, when Courts and C. R. Darden, chairman of the Mississippi delegation to the Civil Rights Assembly, visited Eastland.

The Mississippi senator greeted his two constituents warmly, and seemed anxious to hear what they had to say.

Courts informed the senator that he had recently heard him making a television address in which he said he was not opposed to the colored people of Mississippi voting.

* * *

"WELL I GOT SHOT," said Courts, "because I was encouraging colored people of Belzoni to vote."

"Who shot you?" asked Eastland.

When Courts said he did not know, Eastland replied that he heard Courts knew who shot him.

"Senator Eastland seemed to be interested in me, and seemed sorry for what happened in Belzoni," Courts later declared.

* * *

THIS MILITANT LEADER had, on the previous night, reviewed before a large audience the attempt made upon his life a number of months ago.

He told how he was shot down in his own store. He said it was because he had encouraged colored people of his county to register and vote.

He reviewed how he had been called before the White Citizens Committee and instructed to take his name from the registration list. When he refused he found himself the victim of an "economic squeeze."

Wholesalers refused to sell him groceries. The landlord refused to accept his rent. Consequently he was put out of the building.

* * *

HE TOLD HOW his life had been threatened and how his friend and co-worker, the Rev. George Lee, was killed in cold blood for the same reason.

He reviewed in detail the shooting. And after he recovered, the White Citizens circulated the false statement that someone of his own race had shot him about a woman, he declared.

He claimed that the FBI came down to investigate but instead of asking him questions they told him what the White Citizens had said.

And finally, he said, he was warned by the council that there was no need of him going to Washington to tell his story because they had Senator Eastland up there to take care of the situation.

* * *

"HE SEEMED determined to see us," said Darden, although he was terribly busy. He had several conferences and had to go to the Senate, but he gave them a few minutes before being called to the floor.

He informed them that he would have to go, but he would talk with them some more if they had time to wait around until 5 p.m.

Senator Eastland shook the delegates' hands and asked what he could do for them.

When he was asked how he stood on certain civil rights legislation, he replied that he was in favor of protecting the rights of voters.

He also favored legislation to protect citizens from mob violence.

* * *

THE SENATOR added that he is against lawlessness and violence, but he didn't know what could be done about it.

"Both the Democrats and Republicans are guilty of 'kicking civil rights around,'" said Eastland.

He argued that the President has the power to act in these matters. If he doesn't act; Eastland recommended, "You should elect a President who will."

When questioned on whether he would make every effort to bring civil rights bills out of the Judiciary Committee, which he now heads, Eastland replied that there is nothing he can do to block these bills.

"If the subcommittees have voted the bills out, there is nothing I can do as chairman to keep them from coming out of committee," said the senator.

* * *

EASTLAND SAID he favored legislation which guaranteed the right to vote in Federal elections. As for the other bills supported by the Civil Rights Assembly, Eastland said he had not read them, didn't know what they contained. He would not commit himself on them either one way or the other.

* * *

THE MISSISSIPPI delegation also visited Rep. Frank Smith. He told them that he did not favor any civil rights bills, because he didn't think they would do any good.

"You must be patient and wait on time," he urged. "You must wait until people change their minds."

He argued that no Federal law will help change the present status quo.

"We were getting along fine in the State of Mississippi. But the situation there has been aggravated by the NAACP."

NAACP Aide Hits Eastland As 'Albatross'

Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, March 4 (AP) — A Civil Rights Assembly of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People today heard Sen. Eastland (D-Miss) called a "stinking albatross" around the neck of the Democratic party.

Clarence Mitchell, director of NAACP's Washington bureau, used the expression in an opening address to a three-day conference called in an effort to get federal civil rights legislation passed at this session of Congress through personal contacts with lawmakers.

PARTIES SHARE P. 2

Asserting both major parties share an obligation in this field, Mitchell declared with reference to the Democrats:

"If they're going to keep a stinking albatross like Sen. Eastland around their neck, they've got to kiss our votes goodbye."

Eastland, an outspoken foe of racial integration, last week succeeded to the chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee on the death of Sen. Kilgore (D-WVa). This is the committee that considers most civil rights legislation.

The conference site shifted tonight from a Baptist church to the government's Interdepartmental Auditorium. Permission was granted for the group to use the meeting hall, in the Labor Department building, despite a protest by 30 Southern Democratic members of Congress.

URGES CONGRESS

Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary and chairman of the conference, urged Congress to keep pace with the Supreme Court and the executive branch in civil rights lest "wholesale violence" develop.

Asserting the White Citizens Councils formed in the South to fight school integration "work openly against law and order," Wilkins declared:

"The federal government thus far has offered no relief from this situation, grown so intolerable that public predictions are freely made that wholesale violence will be touched off at any minute. . .

Autherine Lucy, the Negro student whose attempt to enter the University of Alabama touched off rioting, came to Washington in advance of the meeting but did not appear at the opening session. Some 1,800 persons were in attendance.

The conference site shifted tonight from a Baptist church to the government's Interdepartmental Auditorium. Permission was granted for the group to use the meeting hall, in the Labor Department building, despite a protest by 30 Southern Democratic members of Congress. ADDRESS PREPARED

Wilkins said in a prepared address the Lucy incident emphasizes that "the judicial and executive branches of government have progressed with the times, but Congress has failed to pass any civil rights measures in 75 years."

Asserting the White Citizens Councils formed in the South to fight school integration "work openly against law and order," Wilkins declared:

"The federal government thus far has offered no relief from this situation, grown so intolerable that public predictions are freely made that wholesale violence will be touched off at any minute. . .

Nation's Press On Eastland

Aro-Hinencot Decatur, Ill.

NEW YORK TIMES: "James Oliver Eastland, Democrat, of Doddsville, Mississippi, will be 52 years old on Nov. 28 next, and is therefore not an old man as national legislators go.

"As a member of the United States Senate in continuous service since 1943, he has, however, acquired that mystic legislative virtue known as seniority.

In our congress, seniority endows a member with infinite wisdom, even when nature has neglected to do so, and lifts him to the rank of stateman, even when his interpretation of the functions of a state in the Federal Union is fourscore and eleven years out of date.

"A decision of the Supreme Court may be mocked as one has been by James Oliver Eastland, but the laws of seniority are seemingly immutable and stand forever.

"Maybe there is no easy substitute for seniority. There is no substitute for wisdom, either. There is no substitute for faith in the American system of democracy. If something has to give way it had better be seniority."

NEW YORK POST — "Once again the rules of the club have routed the rule of reason.

"James O. Eastland of Mississippi, the most raucous racist in the Senate and spiritual leader of the inflammatory White Citizens Councils, has been elevated to the chairmanship of the powerful Judiciary Committee left vacant by the death of Senator Kilgore.

"His glory is the country's grief.

"Every consideration of justice and decency warranted rejection of Eastland. But he had the magic asset—"seniority." It was, we are told, a matter of old Senaee Custom —a custom time and again discredited by promotions of the wrong man to positions of eminence.

"Eastland now assumes new and significant powers. He becomes the overseer of the Justice Department.

"He rules the committee which must approve all federal judicial appointments, review all constitutional amendments, weigh all immigration and civil rights bills.

"With this expanded domain, he'll haunt the Democratic Party more than ever. But this eminence is a challenge to Republicans and Democrats alike.

"It took the political masterminds a long time to realize they could not deal with McCarthy by pretending he didn't exist.

"Must the country endure the same gruesome spectacle of cowardice and evasion before democracy catches up with Eastland?"

Eastland To Call Judiciary Leadership

Pri. 3-9-56 Kansas City, Mo.

By LOUIS LAUTIER

WASHINGTON, D. C.—(NNPA)—The Senate Friday approved the selection of Senator James O. Eastland, of Mississippi bitter pro-segregationist and critic of the Supreme Court decision against segregated schools as chairman of its powerful Judiciary Committee.

In so doing the Senate refused to put aside in Eastland's case the "seniority rule" under which Senators are advanced to important committee assignments on the basis of length of service and without regard to their ability.

Approval came on a voice vote after two Senators had urged the Senate not to give to Eastland the vacancy caused by the death last week of Senator Harley M. Kilgore, of West Virginia. The Mississippian was next in line on the seniority ladder.

Senators Wayne Morse, of Oregon, and Herbert H. Lehman, of New York, both Democrats, who took the floor to oppose Eastland, were heard to vote "No!" Two of three other Senators voted "no." All other Senators in the chamber at the time voted in the affirmative.

Pri. 3-9-56

The nomination for Eastland's appointment as chairman of the Judiciary committee came from the Democratic steering committee. It was presented by Senator Earle C. Clements, of Kentucky, acting Democratic leader.

Before the vote there was no demand for a quorum call to get Senators to the floor. Nor was there after the voice vote a demand for a record vote.

Kansas City, Mo.

Question His Impartiality

Speaking against the appointment, Senator Morse said he believed that the Supreme Court was "irrefutably right" in its decision against segregated schools. He said the position taken by Eastland on the decision "raises serious questions as to his impartiality to serve" as chairman of the Judiciary Committee.

Morse said he was not arguing that if one takes a view contrary to the Supreme Court on the integration issue, he is disqualified to serve, but he objected to the language Eastland has used in his public speeches.

The Oregon Senator quoted from speeches of Eastland bitterly attacking the court and said Eastland's utterances showed that he cannot be impartial in carrying out the duties of the chairmanship.

He also pointed out that Eastland has been quoted as saying he was opposed to confirmation of United States Solicitor General Simon E. Sobeloff as a judge of the Fourth United States Circuit Court of Appeals because he had strongly advocated integration in the public schools before the Supreme Court.

He contended that these statements indicated that judicial nominations would not receive from Eastland "impartial treatment."

Senator Lehman said it seemed "almost incredible" that the Senate was called upon to consider making Eastland chairman of the Judiciary committee.

Views Disqualify Him

He said Eastland's prejudices, views and activities "completely disqualify him from presiding as chairman of the Judiciary committee.

Lehman pointed out that Eastland had, on the floor of the Senate, advocated white supremacy, called the CIO and its Political Action Committee "communist organizations," and said the Supreme Court has become "indoctrinated and brainwashed by leftwing pressure groups.

He also said Eastland has urged southern states to defy the Supreme Court decision and assumed a leadership role in the so-called White Citizens Councils.

"I believe that Senator Eastland is a symbol of racism in America," Lehman declared.

He also called the Mississippian "a symbol of defiance to the Constitution of the United States as interpreted by the Supreme Court."

Senator Thomas H. Kuchel, Republican, of California, said the only question before the Senate was whether Democratic Senators have the right to determine Democratic membership of committees and, under the long established custom, who the chairman of the committee shall be.

He said he question the seniority rule as it has been passed down but he conceded that the Democratic members had the right to present the resolution naming Eastland to the chairmanship of the Judiciary committee.

He reminded Morse that five years ago he had been elected as a Republican but had seen fit to change his party affiliation and move over to the Democratic side of the Senate.

If he had not made this change, Kuchel said, Republicans would be in control of the Senate and the question of Eastland's appointment to the Judiciary committee chairmanship would never have arisen.

Senator Alben W. Barkley, Democrat, of Kentucky, defended the seniority rule. He said he differed with Eastland on a great many issues.

"It is unfortunate and regrettable that any member of the United States Senate should anywhere, under any circumstances urge our people to nullify or disrespect or flout the decisions of our Supreme Court," Barkley said.

Eastland Vows Races In South Won't Integrate

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Sen. James O. Eastland (D) Miss., a leader in the fight against school integration, charged last night that left wing groups "are in control of both major parties and the Government of the United States."

The Mississippi Democrat accused the Supreme Court of being "indoctrinated and brainwashed" by such groups in writing its school segregation decision.

He told a nationwide television audience on the BC show, "Meet The Press," that the high court ruling "is a clear invasion of the Constitution. . .that will destroy the states."

VOWS DISOBEDIANCE

The Senator vowed that Southerners will find a way of getting around the decision.

He suggested two courses:

1. Adoption of interposition legislation declaring that the court decision does not apply to the states. This would be followed by a constitutional amendment guaranteeing to the states jurisdiction over health, education, marriage, morals and "good order."

2. The segregation of students for reasons of health, morals or academic standards. The court decision bans segregation only for racial reasons.

Eastland declared: "I believe in full economic equality for every man regardless of race. . .but there are social questions and we have a social problem that we think we know more about than people who do not have the problem."

"DECISION ILLEGAL"

He argued that "any competent lawyer in the United States knows the court's decision was illegal."

Eastland said the South will not obey the ruling and "The reason for it is exactly what happened in the Northern states under the 18th Amendment . . . The law is what people want it to be."

The 18th Amendment brought prohibition to the U. S., and later was repealed after more than 12 years of bootleggins and countless violations of the law.

Eastland asserted that "There is no demand in Mississippi for integration by any race." He added: "No race wants it. Nobody wants it. . .we've got the Constitution of the United States with us."

The court decision, however, will be resisted "by legal means," the Senator emphasized.

HAS NO CANDIDATE

Asked whether he would support Ohio Gov. Frank Lausche for the Democratic presidential nomination, Eastland replied: "I don't know a thing about Gov. Lausche. I don't have a segregation candidate and I don't have an integration candidate. I just don't have a candidate."

Sen. Richard Russell (D) Ga., and other Southern leaders have indicted they would approve Lausche's nomination.

The Governor plans to be a favorite son candidate from his state, but claims he is not actually running for president. Lasuche is a supporter of states rights, but opposes segregation.

Eastland stated: "Segregation is not based on any doctrine or racial superiority. . .Segregation has been found necessary by the people who have the problem to promote a harmonious relationship between the races."

"A concerted attempt is being made to suppress the truth of what is going on in the Washington school system." Washington, D.C.

"President Eisenhower promised that the Washington schools would be a laboratory to demonstrate to the world how easily and effectively integration and democracy would work. President Eisenhower's own grandchildren have been removed from a system that permits integrated schools and placed in a private segregated Episcopal school in Alexandria, Va.

Standards in Jeopardy

"They boasted that Washington schools would be an example of how good racial integration would be. Now they do everything possible to hide their example and secrete the hideous facts.

"In a recent meeting of the city Commissioners in Washington, one Commissioner charged that promotions in the District of Columbia city schools were made by weight and poundage. To this, the superintendent of schools replied that it was not true that promotions in the District of Columbia schools are by size but it is true that promotional standards from one class to another will have to be lowered to accommodate the average.

"Both Negro and white teachers admit there is a definite lowering of standards in the integrated schools. The white children are being pulled down to the intelligence level of the Negroes. A Negro principal said: 'I wonder if it isn't more important to American cultural progress to sacrifice scholastic standards for the additional value of both groups sharing the experience of living together.'

Cites Examinations

"How low these standards are was recently revealed by examinations. Of 4,155 tenth grade pupils enrolled last fall, 1,004 of them had reached only a sixth grade or under level in reading; that of 3,979 tenth grade pupils, 1,798 had reached only a sixth grade or under level in arithmetic. The school authorities refused to break these figures down as between white and Negro children. But, is that necessary to form the proper conclusion?"

Asked for comment on the Eastland charge about the President's grandchildren, White House explained:

Maj. John Eisenhower's son, Dwight David II, 7, and daughter Barbara Anne, 6, attended the Fort Belvoir post school for a short time last fall but were transferred several months ago to the St. Agnes Episcopal School in Alexandria. Susan Elaine, 4, is now attending the Fort Belvoir nursery school.

There are at least two colored children in Susan Elaine's room, according to a spokesman at Fort Belvoir.

There is only a small number of colored pupils in the post schools, however. All three Eisenhower grandchildren attend a biracial post Sunday school, the spokesman added.

Stern Resistance Urged By Senator Eastland

COLUMBIA, S. C., Jan. 27 (AP). —The South Carolina Association of Citizens' Council was told by Senator Eastland, Democrat of Mississippi, last night that "stern resistance" is the "only course open to the South" as a result of the United States Supreme Court decision against segregated public schools.

Senator Eastland addressed a crowd that filled the Columbia Township Auditorium well beyond its 3,500 capacity. He was applauded loudly and frequently.

Senator Eastland, introduced by Senator Thurmond, Democrat of South Carolina, asserted that the resistance "inspired" by the councils in Southern States "has spread all over the United States." The councils have maintenance of segregated schools as one objective.

Calling for a "united Southern front," Senator Eastland said 'Southern people are right legally and morally" in the issue.

The South "must take the offense," he maintained, and see that it gets its side of the case to every section of the country. He said public funds must be used to combat what he called a flood of propaganda directed against the South's stand and traditions by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, backed by "church groups, racial organizations, labor unions and liberal groups of all shades."

Get set, Dixie

Nat'l News P. 1

NEXT WEEK Time Magazine is set to print a cover story on Sen. James O. Eastland (D., Miss.).

Sat 3/17/56

If earlier Time coverage of the school segregation issue and its previous comments on Eastland are any indication, the South and the Southern wing of the Democratic Party are in for a roasting. And the chances are strong that Eastland will be attacked not only as a political personality in his own right but as a symbol of Dixie's opposition to integration in the schools.

It WOULD NOT be surprising, too, if the magazine contended that Eastland, single-handedly, has already split the Democratic Party beyond all repair in 1956.

Eastland Asks Public Funds To Wage Integration Fight

Fri. 4-27-56 P. 2-A

Montgomery, Ala.

TUPELO, Miss., April 26 (AP)—Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss) today called for the use of public funds —"and we have a legal right to do so" — to fight integration.

Addressing the 1st Dist. convention of the Mississippi American Legion, Eastland said the South can no longer stay on the defensive.

"The opposition has several million dollars," he said. "We must use public funds and we have a legal right to do so because in essence this is an attack upon the South.

"The first duty of the state is to protect its sovereignty. We must bring to the attenion of the people what integration will do to our school system."

The Mississippi Legislature recently voted $250,000 to finance the work of a newly created State Sovereignty Commission for the avowed purpose of resisting federal "encroachment" in any form. form.

The senator said the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People is "a front, an action group. Behind it is a more powerful group directing its every move."

He did not identify the directing group.

He said border states—those between the segregated South and the integrated North and Midwest —have "weak-kneed political leaders."

He said "if we can win the border states I am confident of the outcome. The determination of the South has caused the people of the North to stop and think. Now they say 'We had better go slowly.'

"The average man thinks exactly as we do. We are not going to permit NAACP agitators to take over and run our states."

The senator said segregation fights are being waged in the North "and the outcome there will determine what happens here."

Eastland said the last thing Mississippi will do is to permit the NAACP to play a political game at the expense of "our children."

"The first line of defense is the home," he said. "If we lose the minds of children there is no hope for the future."

SENATOR SCORES SUPREME COURT

Eastland Charges Further Slash at States

Wed. 4-11-56

WASHINGTON, April 10 (AP)—Sen. Eastland (D-Miss.) said Tuesday the Supreme Court "has slashed still further the rights of states and their subdivisions" by overturning the dismissal of a New York teacher who invoked the 5th Amendment.

"If this decision stands, it may be impossible for states and their subdivisions to protect themselves from Communist infiltration and influence,' Eastland said i'n a statement at the conclusion of a Senate internal security subcommittee hearing.

Eastland, the subcommittee chairman, struck out at the court's 5-4 decision yesterday that New York city had no right to fire Dr. Harry Slochower as an associate professor of German at Brooklyn College just because he had invoke his 5th Amendment protection against self-incrimination.

Slochower, in testifying before the internal security subcommittee in 1952, refused to say whether he had been a Communist in 1940 or 1941 but swore he had not been since then.

The Supreme Court ruled that the dismissal of Slochower for using his 5th Amendment protection violated the Constitution's guarantee of "due process of law."

In accusing the court of "slashing" states' rights, Eastland said that "New York city has the responsibility of hiring suitable teachers for the children of its citizens, who are entrusted to it for their education and training."

He added that it seemed to him to be "a misinterpretation of the intent of statutes," such as the New York city code, to hold that "the spectacle of a college professor refusing to deny before a duly-authorized tribunal that he had been a communist cannot justify New York city in concluding that he is disqualified from holding a position of trust and confidence."

"These statutes do not impute guilt, as the court seems to imply," Eastland said, "but rather bear on the fitness of a public servant who should be above suspicion."

Eastland said the subcommittee would take up with Dr. Joseph Cavallero, president of the New York city Board of Higher Education, and Dr. Harry R. Gideonse, president of Brooklyn College, "the problems that now confront them."

Subcommittee Counsel Robert Morris said that Cavallero had been scheduled previously to testify before the subcommittee in the next few weeks with respect to the administration of the New York city employe loyalty program.

The court's decision yesterday appeared to have no practical effect for Slochower. President Gideonse of Brooklyn College said in New York Slochower would be reinstated and then suspended on other charges.

Battle over Eastland

Times Herald 3-6-56

SOME SIGNIFICANT backstage conferences took place before and after Sens. Wayne Morse of Oregon and Herbert Lehman of New York made their fight against Sen. James Eastland of Mississippi to be chairman of the key Judiciary Committee.

One conference took place the day before the Senate fight when a group of liberal Democrats tried to persuade Morse from taking a stand against Eastland. They told him he was sure to lose, was fighting a hopeless battle.

SEN. EASTLAND

"Eastland's friends will retaliate against by cutting appropriations for public works," Morse was advised, referring to the fact that public works are important to the Far West.

"All you're doing is guaranteeing that I make the speech," Morse replied.

He went on to argue that Eastland had virtually accused the U. S. Supreme Court of treason, therefore should not be in charge of judicial matters; that he had investigated The New York Times when other members of his committee knew almost nothing about the investigation; and that in general, Eastland had out-McCarthy'd McCarthy. To make a man of this type chairman of a committee which passes on 50 per cent of the Senate's legislation merely because of the accident of seniority, Morse argued, was a mistake.

But of the liberals present, only Neuberger of Oregon and McNamara of Michigan agreed to go along with him on a roll-call vote.

Southern Democratic Chairman

Inquirer Sat. 3-17-56 p. 10

Clarence Mitchell, Washington representative of the NAACP, has called Senator Jim Eastland "a stinking albatross" around the neck of the Democratic party. Senator Eastland recently succeeded the late, liberal Senator Harley M. Kilgore of West Virginia as chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee. The customs of senority being what they are, of course, there was not much else that the Democrats could do except to let this hate- monger from Mississippi become head of their Senate committee which is the guardian of the U. S. Constitution. It smelled so bad that Democratic Senators Lehman of New York and Morse of Oregon felt compelled to protest.

This case of Senator Eastland raises the whole question of Southern Democratic chairmen of committees in both houses of the Congress. It must be quite embarrassing to Democrats in other sections of the nation. Worst of all it puts these Southern Democratic chairmen in the public eye in this year of presidential as well as congressional elections.

Houston, Tex.

With civil rights, for instance, as one of the big issues before the country today, how can the Democrats make any promises that they will do anything in the Congress about civil rights legislation as long as Jim Eastland is chairman of the Senate Judiciary Committee? It poses quite a question.

Of course, the Republicans have no congressional record either in favor of civil rights since Rutherford B. Hayes turned the fortunes of Negroes over to the South in 1887. But at the same time the Republicans are trying to take advantage of the embarrassment of the Democrats without doing much for civil rights legislation. It may be however, that a wise Providence will so shape the issues that the citizenship rights of Negroes will be benefited by this great dilemma which faces both Republicans and Democrats. The only advantage that the Republicans have is that they are not saddled with such congressional chairmen as Jim Eastland and the rest of the Southern chairmen of committees.

KILGORE DEATH PUTS EASTLAND IN POWER POST

Daily Tribune Wed. 2-29-56 Chicago, Ill.

Washington, Feb. 28 (AP)—The death today of Sen. Kilgore [D., W. Va.] means a sharp change in control of the senate's powerful judiciary committee of which he was chairman. Kilgore, 63, suffered a stroke Saturday and died in Bathesda naval hospital. P. 5

The new chairman, under the seniority rule, will be Sen. Eastland [D., Miss.], a conservative southerner who has taken a leading role in the south's fight against school integration.

Kilgore, who had headed the the committee since the Democrats regained control of Congress in January, 1955, generally was a New Dealer who supported such liberal legislation. He was head of the subcommittee on immigration and strongly favored liberalization of the immigration law.

Foe of Civil Rights

Eastland has been one of the strong senate opponents of civil rights legislation of the kind advocated by former President Truman, including such measures as a fair employment practices commission. He frequently expressed views similar to those of late Sen. McCarran [D., Nev.], who headed the judiciary committee for many years. McCarran died in September, 1954.

The judiciary committee is one of the senate's most important, having the largest staff and largest budget of 15 standing committees. The senate recently voted it more than a million dollars in extra funds for various investigations.

The committee handles more than half of all the bills introduced in the senate; many of these, however, are private claims and immigration measures. It also passes on all Presidential nominations to the federal judiciary, from the Supreme court downward.

Handles Important Bills

The group also works on mportant legislation, including constitutional amendments, immigration bills, and nearly all of the controversial civil rights measures.

The Mississippi senator practiced law at Ruleville, Mass., before entering the senate. He operates a cotton plantation near Ruleville and has been interested in cotton legislation thruout his senate career.

Since January, 1955, he has headed the important internal security subcommittee of the judiciary group. This subcommittee has made many widely publicized investigations of communist influence since it was set up by McCarran five years ago. Eastland may retain the chairmanship of internal security committee. McCarran held both posts.

New Bills To Test Fairness Of Eastland

Defender Sat. 3-17-56

WASHINGTON — (ANP)—Mississippi Senator James O. Eastland, who recently assumed chairmanship of the Senate Judiciary Committee, will have his "impartiality" tested when the committee begins consideration of four civil rights bills.

Chicago, Ill.

Eastland's claim of impartiality came after his appointment was severely criticized because of Eastland's extremely pro - segregation activities. P. 1

The bills were put to the Judiciary Committee by the Senate subcommittee on constitutional rights, headed by Senator Thomas C. Hennings of Missouri.

Hennings said the measures would protect the voting rights of all citizens in federal elections and primaries, establish new civil rights enforcement machinery in the Attorney General's office, provide protection against physical harm for members of the armed forces and create an anti-lynch law.

Conscience Hurting?

Defender p. 9

The FBI has suddenly become supersensitive to criticism. Stung by charges of laxity over crimes involving Negroes in the South, J. Edgar Hoover, the director, has demanded that Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mississippi either support or retract his specific accusation that the bureau leaked information about Negro slayings in Mississippi.

We believe there is ample evidence to support allegations of terrorism and violence against Negroes all throughout the South. Nobody needs to consult any law books to prove this. In Mississippi, helpless Negro citizens are existing under a state of anarchy and fear, such as has never been seen in the darkest dungeons behind the Iron Curtain.

Chicago, Ill.

The FBI has said time after time that it had no authority to go in and investigate cases like that of the brutal lynching of 14-year old Emmett Louis Till. This leaves Negro citizens in the position of being without protection either from local and state authorities nor from the Federal government itself. Where, then, are they to turn to?

If consciences are being stung, these are hopeful signs that instead of indifference to brutality, maybe at long last some laws can be passed and the machinery provided so the FBI can have no excuse for not moving into Mississippi, and any place else where they are needed.

Mr. Hoover is riding the wrong horse when he castigates Dr. Howard for saying what are the thoughts of decent people all over the country. "Where is the FBI? Can't they do something about this?"

Negro Leader Chided For Criticizing FBI

World-Telegram & Sun

By the United Press

MEMPHIS, Jan. 18.—FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover challenged a Negro civil rights leader to produce evidence to back up "false and baseless" charges on the FBI's handling of Negro killings in Mississippi.

In a letter released last night by the FBI office here, Mr. Hoover told Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss., he should either support or retract charges that the FBI "leaked" information about Negro slayings in Mississippi.

Mr. Hoover also took Dr. Howard to task for telling a Negro organization that "we must find out why Southern investigators for the FBI can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved."

Dr. Howard, reached in Los Angeles, said he based his statements on "reports brought to me by responsible Negroes in various sections of Mississippi."

New York

Dr. Howard told the Memphis Commercial Appeal by phone he had not received the FBI letter.

N. Y.

Of the charge that Southern FBI agents can't seem to solve a Negro slaying, Mr. Hoover pointed out that it is the FBI's duty merely to investigate reports of alleged civil rights violations and report their findings to the Justice Department.

The militant leader of the Mississippi Regional Council has been on a cross-country tour to tell the nation what is happening in his home state.

His most recent clash was with J. Edgar Hoover, FBI director, who challenged him to prove his charges of FBI failure to investigate crimes against Negroes and of "leaks to local law officers on Negroes who complain of mistreatment."

Dr. Howard described Humphrey County, Miss., the seat of which is Belzoni, as the "No. 1 Grade A Hell Hole" of the state. He said conditions there were indescribable and horrible beyond conception.

The meeting voted unanimously to send telegrams to J. Edgar Hoover and President Eisenhower saying that Dr. Howard is not alone in wondering why the FBI is not more effective in its investigation of atrocities against Negroes.

The audience which had paid $1 per person admission took up a collection of $378 to give to Dr. Howard for the Mississippi Regional Council to buy badly needed coal for the victims of the current economic squeeze.

The mass meeting was under the joint auspices of the Missionary Society of the church, Mrs. Minnie Walden, president, and wife of the pastor, Dr. Harvey E. Walden, and the COS club, Mrs. Alberta Gibson, president.

Dr. E. Milton Johnson was master of ceremonies. Dr. Homer Wilburn gave the welcome address and Dr. Howard was introduced by Dr. Roscoe Giles.

CHICAGO. — (ANP) — "The Mississippi Story" will be told in detail to an expected capacity audience at Grant Memorial AME church here by Dr. T. R. M. Howard, president of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership and prominent Mound Bayou, Miss. physician. Dr. Howard will be featured on a program sponsored jointly by the Missionary society and the COS club, Sunday, Jan. 29 at 3:30 p.m.

In his talk, Dr. Howard will give a comprehensive report on the reported widespread reign of terror against Negroes in that state. He is also expected to give a detailed account of the recent murder of Emmett Till, Chicago schoolboy, for which two Mississippians, J. W. Milam and Roy Bryant, have been tried and acquitted. Dr. Howard helped spearhead an investigation into the murder.

The Till murder case has taken on new national significance in the wake of a story published in the current issue of Look magazine charging that one of the two men acquitted murdered Emmett because he bragged about his relationship with white girls, and wouldn't scare.

Music on the program will be furnished by the senior choir and the Imperial male chorus under the direction of Prof. Elmur E. Simpson.

Declaring that her exclusion from school is a mutiny against the United States Government and a most recent edict of the United States Supreme Court, Rudsten said he is circulating petitions throughout his District asking thousands of American Citizens to join with him in protesting this action and urging United States Attroney General and the Department of Justice to take immediate action to grant Miss Lucy her Civil Rights.

Rudsten stated that he was inspired into this effort by the recent visit of Dr. Thurlow Howard from Mississippi who last week was the guest of Senator Rudsten in the State Senate where he addressed the assembled Senators. Rudsten stated that in all his civic and political experience he has never heard a greater speech dedicated to human rights and liberty than the short one delivered by Dr. Howard in the State Senate where he pointed out that depriving freedom from one American is o loss of freedom to every American. "No man" said Rudsten, "is an island unto himself, and when a clot of earth is washed away from the sea or the manor of thy friend do not ask for whom the bells toll, they toll for thee."

RAudsten asked that all petitions be sent back to him as soon as possible. He plans to present these petitions to the Mass. Congressional Delegation in Washington, D.C. personally.

"We're on the march today, I believe God permitted us to pass through 250 years of slavery and ninety-three years of part freedom to prepare for this hour" stated Dr. T.R.M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss., at a N.A.C.C.P. mass meeting on civil rights at Memorial Hall Sunday at 3:30 p.m. before more than 2,500 people.

"The doctrine of gradulism" said Dr. Howard" has no place in this country even though the president has spoken of gradual approach to racial problems.

"The time is ripe today. Tell them ... an of Asia and Russia is watching and, even if the Negro is willing to wait, the period of history in this world is not going to wait."

In speaking about the recent incidents in Mississippi and Alabama he praised the Negro Ministers and their non-violent leadership in proving to the world that a "new Negro" has come forth.

Adding a touch of humor, he added that when the Bible says "Feed my Sheep" it meant to be fed a balanced diet and not just a piece meal.

"We have taken the white man's religion and the white man's law to make a chain," he continued, and we are using it to squeeze him into doing what he needs to do."

DR. T. R. M. HOWARD

Dr. Howard stated he was somewhat surprised to hear the statements made by Atty. Elmer C. Jackson, who briefly but effectively reviewed integration in the public schools of Kansas City, Kansas, and that a suit had to be filed in the so called "free state of Kansas" in order to integrate certain schools." We have it in Mississippi but I thought you did'nt have any Mississippi problems in Kansas."

The program was opened by the presiding officer the Rev. I. B. Henderson Sr., president of the Kansas City branch of the N.A.A.C.P. Prayer was offered by the Rev. E. A. Freeman, and the scripture lesson was read by the Rev. E. T. Thornton.

Faulkner Will Fight For Mississippi

Advertiser Montgomery, Ala. 38a

The Noted Novelist, Though Against Enforced Segregation,

Says He'll Join The Whites And Shoot

Negroes, If Forced By Pressure

Sat. 3-17-56 P. 4-A

Russell Warren Howe In The Reporter

¶ Howe, New York correspondent for the London Sunday Times, interviewed William Faulkner Feb. 21 on recent troubles in the South. The following is Howe's account of the interview as published in The Reporter magazine. Faulkner has long opposed compulsory segregation. In a recent issue of Life magazine, he expressed similar opposition to compulsory integration. Noting that the tactics of NAACP were forcing moderates into the camp of the white Southern extremists, Faulkner urged Negroes and liberals to ease the pressure on the South.—Ed.

"MY POSITION is this," said Mr. Faulkner. "My people owned slaves and the very obligation we have to take care of these people is morally bad. It is a position which is completely untenable. But I would wish now that the liberals would stop—they should let us sweat in our own tears for a little while. If we are pushed by the government we shall become an underdog people fighting back because we can do nothing else. Our position is wrong and untenable but it is not wise to keep an emotional people off balance.

FAULKNER

"The Negroes have had 90 years of that sort of life and now that they are winning it would take a lot of wisdom to say 'Go slow.' Perhaps it is too much to ask of them, but it is for their own sake. I have known Negroes all my life and Negroes work my land for me. I know how they feel. But now I have people who say they are Negroes writing to me and saying, 'You mean well for us but please hush. You mean good but you do harm.'"

The Long View

Q. Wouldn't a "go slow" strategy lose some of the ground already gained?

A. I don't know. I try to think of this in the long-term view. Now, I grant you that it is bad that there should be a minority people who because of their color don't have a right to social equality or to justice. But it is bad that Americans should be fighting Americans. That is what will happen because the Southern whites are back in the spirit of 1860. There could easily be another Civil War and the South will be whipped again.

In the long view, the Negro race will vanish in three hundred years by intermarriage. It has happened to every racial minority everywhere, and it will happen here.

Q. What would be the best strategy for the liberals?

A. Let the people stop awhile. If ~~that~~ girl Autherine Lucy goes back to Alabama University . . . she will be killed. The NAACP should forget about Alabama University. It should send people now to the Universities of Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina and let them be thrown out of each of those places, too, until the white people of the South get so sick and tired of being harassed and worried they will have to do something about it . . .

The South Is Armed

Q. Have you heard reports of arms buying in Tuscaloosa?

A. Yes. If that girl dies, two or three white men will be killed, then eight or nine Negroes. Then the troops will come in. You know, we've never had race riots in the South before. They've had race riots in the North but in the South we just have persecution.

The South is armed for revolt. After the Supreme Court decision [of May 17, 1954, on school integration] you couldn't get as much as a few rounds for a deer rifle in Mississippi. The gunsmiths were sold out. These white people will accept another Civil War knowing they're going to lose. If the North knew the South they would know that this is not a theory or a moral convention which they are up against but a simple fact. I know people who've never fired a gun in their lives but who've bought rifles and ammunition.

Q. How long do you think it will be before the concrete aspects of discrimination — in housing, employment, enfranchisement, education, social contacts—will have disappeared?

A. In the Deep South, I don't know. As it was, in 15 years the Negroes would have had good schools. Then came the decision of the Supreme Court and that will mean probably 20 years of trouble. I think that decision put the position of the Negro in the South back five years.

Q. Does that mean that you disapprove of the court decree?

A. I don't disapprove it. It had to be promulgated and it just repeated what was said in January, 1863. If white folks had given Negroes proper schools there would have been no need for the court's decision.

The Negro in the Deep South doesn't want to mix with the white man. He likes his own school, his own church. Segregation doesn't have to imply inferiority.

Take Off The Pressure

Q. How would you re-educate the Southern white to a different way of thinking?

A. First of all, take off the pressure. Let him see just how untenable his position is. Let him see that people laugh at him. Just let him see how silly and foolish he looks. Give him time—don't force us. If that girl goes back to Tuscaloosa she will die. Then the top will blow off. The government will send in its troops and we shall be back at 1860. They must stop pushing these people. The trouble is the North doesn't know that country. They don't know the South will go to war.

Laughing At Montgomery

Q. The Negroes of Montgomery, the capital of Alabama, have been boycotting the city's buses since Dec. 5. Do you think this sort of passive resistance is a good idea?

A. Yes, anything they do is good as long as they don't carry it too far. Today the white women of Montgomery have to go and fetch their Negro cooks by car. It is a good step, to let the white folks see that the world is looking on and laughing at them.

But I don't like enforced integration any more than I like enforced segregation. If I have to choose between the United States government and Mississippi, then I'll choose Mississippi. What I'm trying to do now is not have to make that decision. As long as there's a middle road, all right, I'll be on it. But if it came to fighting I'd fight for Mississippi against the United States even if it meant going out into the street and shooting Negroes. After all, I'm not going out to shoot Mississippians.

Q. You mean white Mississippians?

A. No, I said Mississippians—in Mississippi the problem isn't racial. 90% of the Negroes are on one side with the whites, against a handful like me who believe that equality is important.

Q. Some of your remarks could eb interpreted as disapproval of the existence of militant Negro defense organizations. How do you feel about the NAACP?

A. That organization is necessary, but it must know when to let the opponent make the next move. 90 years of oppression and injustice are there, but it is a lot for the white man to have to admit. It takes an extremely intelligent man to stop dead after 90 years of wrongdoing, and the Southerner isn't that intelligent. He has to feel that what he is doing (when he reforms) is not being forced on him but is spontaneous. We have to make it so that he feels that he is being not just honest but generous. Give him time—right now it's emotional and he'll fight because the country's against him.

Q. In the European press, "go slow" is criticized on the grounds that the susceptibilities of the persecuted deserve more consideration than the susceptibilities of the persecutor. How would you answer that criticism?

A. The European critics are right, morally, but there is something stronger in man than a moral condition. Man will do certain things whether they be right or wrong. We know that racial discrimination is morally bad, that it stinks, that it shouldn't exist, but it does. Should we obliterate the persecutor by acting in a way that we know will send him to his guns, or should we compromise and let it work out in time and save whatever good remains in those white people?

I will go on saying that the Southerners are wrong and that their position is untenable, but if I have to make the same choice Robert E. Lee made then I'll make it. My grandfather had slaves and he must have known that it was wrong, but he fought in one of the first regiments raised by the Confederate army, not in defense of his ethical position but to protect his native land from being invaded.

Q. Do you believe regional loyalty is

'GROSSLY MISQUOTED'

OXFORD, Miss., March 16 (UP)—Novelist William Faulkner said today he apparently was "grossly misuoted" in the current issue of The Reporter magazine as saying he would fight for Mississippi against the United States if he had to choose

"I did not see the magazine," Faulkner told UP, "but it was read to me over the telephone and quoted me as saying the South is armed to oppose integration and if I had to choose between the United States and Mississippi, I would choose Mississippi even to going out and shooting Negroes in the street.

"That's foolish. Of course, I didn't say that because I don't believe it's come to that. I don't know where that came from."

Faulkner said he did not remember talking to a reporter for the magazine. He said other portions of the article as read to him were correct, that he did believe the South would resist racial integration "by force and violence."

a good quality?

A. Well, you must believe in something.

Q. What about your belief in the principles expressed in your books?

A. I shouldn't be betraying them. My Negro boys down on the plantation would would fight against the North with me. If I say to them "Go get your shotguns, boys," they'll come.

Q. Is the basic cause of race prejudice economic, in your opinion?

A. Absolutely. To produce cotton we have to have a system of peonage. That is absolutely what is at the bottom of the situation.

Q. Are the psychological rationalizations for prejudice something grafted onto the economic root?

A. Yes. I would say that a planter who has 1,000 acres wants to keep the Negro in a position of debt peonage and in order to do it he is going to tell the poor class of white folks that the Negro is going to violate his daughter. But all he wants at the back of it is a system of peonage to produce his cotton at the highest rate of profit.

The Heritage Of Man

Q. Do you agree that the ambition spur provided by persecution has made the Negro potentially the more capable of the two "races" in the South?

A. Certainly. He's calmer, wiser, more stable than the white man. To have put up with this situation so long with so little violence shows a sort of greatness. Suppose two Negroes had murdered a white Emmett Till — there would have been a flood of emotionalism. The Negro rose above his anger. He knows that the problem [of his equality] will be solved because it must be. But these ignorant white people have got to be let alone so that they can think that they are changing on their own initiative.

The poor white man knows that although the Negro can only buy the worst land, has bad tools and inferior livestock, he can make a living better than white men could. With a little more social, economic, and educational equality the Negro will often be the landlord and the white man will be working for him. And the Negro won't come out on top because of anything to do with the race but because he has always gotten by without scope—when they are given scope they use it fully. The Negro is trained to do more than a white man can with the same limitations.

The vices that the Negro has have been created in him by the white man, by the system. He will make his own contribution to our society. Already his music and poetry have passed to the white man, and what the white man has done with them is not Negro any more but something else.

There is no such thing as an "Anglo-Saxon" heritage and an African heritage. There is the heritage of man. Nothing is extinct in any race, only dormant. You are brave and tough when you have to be. You are intelligent when the age demands it. There are al lthings in like degree in all races.

TODAY AND TOMORROW

What Faulkner Left Out

News P. 4 Fri. 3-9-56 Birmingham, Ala.

Letter To Magazine Made Sound Appeal; But Nullification, Lucy Case Disturb North

BY WALTER LIPPMANN

LIFE MAGAZINE publishes a letter addressed to the people of the northern states by William Faulkner, the eminent novelist. Mr. Faulkner is a native of Mississippi. He speaks as a Southerner who not only believes in "the simple incontrovertible immorality of discrimination by race" but also that this discrimination is an evil which will be cured eventually by the Southerners themselves. The point of this letter is to warn Northerners that discrimination will not be cured, will in fact become all the sharper, if legal coercion is used to enforce the Supreme Court's decision.

Mr. Faulkner, as a Southerner who is opposed in principle both to segregation and to enforced integration, regards his position as being in the "middle." He sees himself as pressed from two sides between the Citizens Councils on the one hand, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People on the other. He is between those who would uphold "white supremacy" by nullification of the Supreme Court's decision and those who would use the federal power to abolish segregation. Where, he asks, will Southerners like himself go if federal enforcement is attempted? They will go, so he says in effect, with the resistance of the Citizens Councils.

The burden of Mr. Faulkner's plea is that the Northerners should not now press for federal enforcement. For this would make it impossible for Southerners like himself to work for the gradual acceptance of integration.

To this there is something which must be said for the Northerners who will understand and sympathize with Mr. Faulkner's argument. These Northerners include the President and Gov. Stevenson, and they are quite surely a majority today. But their position is threatened by the Southern extremists who not only proclaim the doctrine of nullification but, as in the Lucy case in Alabama, connive at mob violence.

Northern Moderates Can't Acquiesce On Violence

FOR THE MODERATE Northerners it is impossible to accept the gradualism that Mr. Faulkner advises if at the same time they have to acquiesce in what happened at Alabama University. To do so would be to surrender two elementary principles. One is, as Mr. Faulkner defines it, that discrimination by race is immoral. The other is that the laws of the Union bind all who live within the Union. To acquiesce and not to protest would make the middle position unprincipled and in the end untenable.

The situation is one in which all the strong passions tends to run to the two irreconcilable extremes—towards the fierce defense in the Deep South of the white way of life, towards a militant demand by the Negroes and their friends for the vindication of their indubitable human rights. There is little reason to believe that the issue can now be dealt with in the South as it was after the Civil War—by nullification with the assent of the North. There is a new dynamic factor in the situation today—the rise of the American Negro to a position of very considerable economic and political power.

We have seen the first beginnings of what this may bring in the boycott in Montgomery. There the Negro population have practiced passive resistance — the classic tactic of weak and subject peoples. There is every reason to suppose that uncompromising and militant resistance by the Citizens Council in the Deep South will — if it closes the door to gradual reform — cause the Montgomery example to spread.

Basic Weakness Found In Lack Of Program

YET WE CAN HAVE no great hope that mutual warnings like Mr. Faulkner's and mine, that these pious exhortations to reason and moderation, will in themselves be heeded. The basic weakness of the middle position is that it does not now, that it does not as yet, represent a practical and concrete program on which men of moderate temper have agreed to unite. Mr. Faulkner says "go slow now." But what seems to be missing is a consensus of enlightened opinion as to what issues it is necessary and wise to present to the court and in what order. For the formation of such a consensus it may prove necessary to call upon the President for leadership.—©

Faulkner Tells Mixers: Pause To Solidify Gain

Constitution P. 2 Thurs. 3-1-56 Atlanta, Ga.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 29 (AP)—Novelist William Faulkner says integration backers should slow up their current campaign for immediate establishment of mixed schools in the South.

Writing in Life magazine, he says:

"I would say to the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) and all organizations who would compel immediate and unconstitutional integration:

Wm. Faulkner

"'Go slow now. Stop now for a time, a moment. You can afford to withhold for a moment the use of it as a force. You have done a good job, you have jolted your opponent off-balance and he is now vulnerable. But stop there for a moment; don't give him the advantage of a chance to cloud the issue by that purely automatic sentimental appeal to that same universal human instinct for automatic sympathy for the underdog simply because he is under.'"

Faulkner, a member of an old Mississippi family, says the War Between the States failed to prove to the North "that the South will go to any length, even that fatal and already doomed one, before it will accept alteration of its racial condition by mere force of law or economic threat."

His article says swift integration and possible resulting violence might make the whole matter "one of the race," compelling the white prointegration minority like himself "to join the white segregation majority no matter how much we oppose the principle of inequality" and might force the Negro minority who want peace to join the Negro majority who advocate force.

"So the Northerner, the liberal, does not know the South," he writes. "He can't know it from his distance. He assumes that he is dealing with a simple legal theory and a simple moral idea. He is not. He is dealing with a fact: the fact of an emotional condition of such fierce unanimity as to scorn the fact that it is a minority and which will go at any length and against any odds at this moment to justify and, if necessary, defend that condition and its right to it.

"So I would say to all the organizations and groups which would force integration on the South by legal process:

"'Stop now for a moment. You have shown the Southerner what you can do and what you will do if necessary; give him a space in which to get his breath and assimilate that knowledge; to look about and see that (1) nobody is going to force integration on him from the outside; (2) that he himself faces an obsolescence in his own land which he cannot cure; a moral condition which not only must be cured but a physcal condition which has got to be cured if he, the white Southerner, is to have any peace, is not faced with another legal process or maneuver every year, year after year, for the rest of his life.'"

Dr. Howard Rejects Charges

Globe & Independent

Credits NAACP, Aroused Public Opinion For Decline Of Ku Klux Klan, Lynching

Nashville Tenn.

By Luther Carmichael

Fm. 1-27-56

In a ringing answer to FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover that he had made "false and irresponsible charges" against the Federal Bureau of Investigation, Dr. T. R. M. Howard, militant Mississippi Civil Rights leader, rejected the charge and at the same time questioned Mr. Hoover's claim that his bureau was mainly responsible for the breaking up of the Ku Klux Klan in the Carolinas and Georgia, and the virtual elimination of lynching in the South.

"Frankly, Dr. Howard wrote, "there is a wide difference of opinion between us on that score. You are as much entitled to your opinion that the FBI deserves credit on both these scores as I am to mine that lynching was eliminated and the KKK broken up by persistent action by the NAACP and by an aroused public opinion. I cannot recall a prosecution of lynching, as such, by the Federal Government and I suppose that such prosecution would be undertaken only after investigation by the Bureau. I also understand that there is no federal anti-lynching, as such, is a matter for the states. . . ."

In speeches and news conferences, Dr. Howard had been highly critical of the FBI, which he said, "can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved."

Dr. Howard's complete communication to Mr. Hoover follows:

Mr. J. Edgar Hoover, Director
Federal Bureau of Investigation
Washington, D. C.

Dear Sir:

On January 18, 1956, I was called by the Memphis Commercial Appeal, and asked if I had any comment on a letter from you to me which you had released to them. Subsequently, and on the same day, I received similar calls from other newspapers and press associations. Your letter to me reached my Mound Bayou, Mississippi, home at 9 a.m. on January 19, 1956, a full twelve hours after my first call from the newspapers. Since I had not received your letter when I was queried by these newspapers, I was unable to make a complete reply. I can only presume that you released the letter prior to the time it could possibly have reached me and that you wanted the whole matter to become an issue in the area of public controversy. I shall, therefore, follow your example and release this letter to the newspapers.

The crux of your complaint, as I gather it, is that I have made false and irresponsible charges" against the FBI in connection with the murders of George W. Lee, of whom were killed in Mississippi LaMar Smith and Emmett Till, all during 1955. I am sure that you will understand that these murders all of which have gone unpunished, have excited genuine concern on the part of millions of Americans. That concern has been heightened by the fact that J. W. Milam and Roy Bryant explained in last week's "Look" magazine that they did kill Emmett Till. Since that confession there has been no move to take any further proceedings against them, either by state or federal authorities, so far as I know. As a resident of Mississippi, I know, and I am sure that FBI agents know, that the facts in the George Lee and LaMar Smith murders are widely known in the communities in which they were murdered.

Asked for Conference

I am a layman, not a lawyer. I do not pretend to know the intricacies of the law. I do know that my own criticism of the failure of justice in these cases is a reflection of the feelings of the many thousands of persons to whom I have spoken and with whom I have talked in the past few months. They are as dismayed as I am that murders can be committed in the United States and that murderers can escape indictment, as in the George Lee and LaMar Smith cases, or win acquittal as in the Emmett Till case, when, as in all of these cases, the facts about the cases are so well known to law enforcement authorities, federal as well as state.

As I understand your concept of the law in these matters, your Bureau is required only to make investigations at the request of the Department of Justice. After you have made these investigations, upon request, you lay the facts before the Department of JJustice which then determines whether or not prosecution will be undertaken or further investigations will be made. It seems reasonable to suppose that the Department of Justice must depend, for a final judgment as to whether or not prosecution will be undertaken, on the facts as reported by your Bureau. You say that such investigations were made in the George Lee case. I do not know, of course, the extent of your investigation. I do not know whether or not you determined that this was merely a murder case, falling within the province of the State of Mississippi, or whether you determined it was part of a wide-spread conspiracy reching across state lines that might have brought them within the purview of federal- civil- rights statutes. What I do know is that a Negro citizen who sought to vote was murdered and that both State and Federal Governments have declined to take any action. I do not know upon what grounds the Department of Justice declined jurisdiction. I do know that I sent a telegram to the Department of Justice asking for a conference on these matters and received an answer some four weeks later stating that such a conference would be arranged. No date was set for the propose meeting.

It was against that background that I voiced my criticism of federal inaction in my Baltimore speech, the qoutation attributed to me by the Baltimore Morning Sun is not entirely accurate.

Reiterates Charge

In substance I said on that occasion that "We must find out why the FBI cannot seem to solve a crime where a Negro is murdered by a white man in Mississippi." Whether the reason for that failure lies in inadequacy of federal statues, or restrictive interpretation of such statutes by the Department of Justice or the failure of FBI investigative machinery, the fact remains that "the FBI cannot seem to solve a crime where a Negro is murdered by a white man in Mississippi.' Of courseI do not know the extent or character of the Bureau's investigation in the Till case. I do not know whether your investigation was made available to Mississippi law enforcement authorities. It is plain now in the light of the J. W. Milam confession in the Till case that the facts in that case lay close to the surface. I have the impression that in many instances the FBI has conducted investigations and founds facts which were then given to state authorities for prosecution of the wrong doers.

You say that I have "conveniently forgotten the work of this Bureau . . was largely responsible for the virtual elimination of lynching in the South and, also, was mainly responsible for the breaking up of the KKK in the Carolinas and Georgia." Frankly, there is a wide difference of opinion between us on that score. You are as entitled to your opinion that the FBI deserves credit on both these scores as I am to mine that lynching was eliminated and the KKK broken up by persistent action by the NAACP and by an aroused public opinion. I cannot recall a prosecution of lynching, as such, by the Federal Government and I suppose that such prosecution would be undertaken only after investigation by the Bureau. I also understand that there is no federal statutes have been violated. If prosecution of lynching, as such, is a matter for the States. In view of that fact, I do not understand how the FBI was able to take effective action to "virtually eliminate" lynching in light of your statement that the Department of Justice can act only when Federal statutes have been violated. If the Federal Government was able to act in the area of lynching, in the absence of a federal anti-lynching statute, is it possible to undertake similar action in caases such as the George Lee, LaMar Smith and Emmett Till cases in light of a similar claimed lack of applicable Federal statutes?

I did charge in my Chicago Press Conference speech that there had apparently been a "leak" of FBI investigations in Mississippi. The complainants live in Mississippi and I believe that you will agree with me that any complainant in that state risks his personal safety when he makes charges that run counter to current public opinion in that state. Therefore, I will not recite the specific case in this letter which will be released to the press. Under separate cover I am sending you a statement of the facts in that case. I know that you will guarantee the safety of that individual. One of the things which I wanted to discuss, and tried to discuss, with the Department of Justice was that very matter. Since I was never given a definite appointment I was unable to present it through those channels.

In conclusion, I reject the charge that I have made "false and irresponsible chages." I have exercised my right as an American citizen to criticise governmental functions. I shall continue to exercise that right, even when it leads to a difference of opinion between me and the public servants. I regret that this controversy has arisen since it tends to obscure the fact that the real issue in the South, and in the Nation and the world for that matter, is not our differences as to FBI action, or in action, but the fact that American citizens are being wantonly murdered in Mississippi and that their murderers are going unpunished. Since your letter to me was in the nature of an open statement to the newspapers I regret very much that you did not see fit to include in it a condemnation of these murders. Your condemnation might do much to halt this wave of violence. In any event, I shall continue to join with the millions of other Americans and cry out against injustice and against that kind of administration of justice which permits murderers to go free to boast their crimes.

Dr. T. R. M. Howard

Hoover Denies Howard's Charges

Globe & Independent

Dr. T. R. M. Howard
Mound Bayou, Mississippi

Nashville Tenn.

Dear Sir:

During the recent months, a number of newspaper articles have come to my attention which attribute to your statements concerning the function of the Federal Bureau of Investigation. Your statement as reported by the press pertaining to the FBI reflects a complete disregard of the facts on your part. You, as an American citizen, have every right to express yourself as you see fit, however, I do not feel that you have any right, whatsoever, to be wrong on your facts, particularly when they are used in public statements concerning serious matters. Let me cite a few specific incidents:

Fm. 1-27-56

The Baltimore Morning Sun newspaper issued September 26, 1955 carries a newspaper story head line, Probe of Southern FBI Asked.

This story contains certain erroneous statements which you made before a membership meeting of the NAACP at the Sharpe Street Methodist Church at Baltimore.

You are quoted as saying, "We must find out why Southern investigators of the FBI can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved." You made these statements in connection with the slaying of Emmitt Till, George W. Lee and LaMar Smith.

Hold Preliminary Inquiries

For your information this Bureau upon instuction of the Civil Rights Section of the Central Crime Division of the Department of Justice, conducted a preliminary inquiry immediately upon the receipt of information alleging a Civil Rights violation and the facts are submitted to the Department of Justice for its determination as to prosecution of further investigative action. Further investigation of Civil Rights cases are conducted at the direction of the Department of Justice.

The FBI is not a policy making organization and we merely conduct fair and impartial investigations and submit the results of such investigation to the Department of Justice.

This Bureau is doing everything within the scope of existing legislation in Civil Rights matters, and our fair and prompt investigations have done much to increase public respect for and consciousness of Civil Rights.

You seem to have conveniently forgotten the work of this Bureau which was largely responsible for the virtual elimination of lynchings in the South, and, also, was mainly responsible for the breaking up of the KKK in the Carolinas and Georgia.

State FBI Position

In regard to the specific cases which you mention in your talk in Baltimore, I would like you to be aware of the Bureau's position in each instance. As you will recall when the body of Emmitt Till was found in the Tallehatchie River in Mississippi, August 31st, 1955 the available facts concerning this was presented to the Civil Rights Commission of the Department of Justice by this Bureau.

This Department advised that the facts would not indicate a violation of any Federal statute. Accordingly this Bureau did not conduct any further investigation in this case.

In the Rev. Lee case you will recall that the Rev. Lee was killed on May 7th, 1955. The Criminal Division of the Department of Justice requested an investigation into the death of Rev. Lee. Such an investigation was immediately conducted by agents of this Bureau and the facts as developed were submitted to the Department of Justice. In connection with the LaMar Smith case the facts surrounding this matter were submitted to the Criminal Division of the Department of Justice and we were advised that an investigation was not to be carried out by this Bureau.

The Chicago American on December 28, 1955, carried a news story entitled "FBI Leaks Hit at Till Acquittal." According to the news story you stated confidential information usually leaks from the local FBI office, and witnesses to Negro slaying are subjected to pressures, as results. You, undoubetdly, know that information contained in the files of this Bureau is confidential in nature, and I am deeply concerned as your statement contains a very serious charge. If you have evidence of such a grave dereliction of duty, then it is your duty to call it to the attention of the responsible officials of the FBI or Department of Justice.

From the information available to me, I know of no such instance. I feel compelled to request that you submit such evidence you have to sustain your irresponsible charge or that you issue a public retraction.

Heads Medical Group

Irresponsible and false charges can serve no useful purpose in this criticaal period. In fact they are a disservice to common decency and I do not propose to permit false charges made against this Bureau to go unchallenged. If you were interested in the truth as to how this Bureau has discharged its responsibility in any area, you would have made inquiry through responsible channels which are open to every citizen before making your intemperate and baseless charges.

Very sincerely yours,
John Edgar Hoover

FBI Chief Blasts Civil Rights Leader For Charges Of Laxity

World, Birmingham, Ala. Fri. 1-27-56

MEMPMIS, Tenn.— (INS)— FBI Chief J .Edgar Hoover demanded Wednesday that a Mississippi Negro leader in Civil rights activities prove or retract what Hoover called "irresponsible and false charges" concerning FBI activity in Negro slayings in the South.

Hoover, in a letter written to Dr. T. R. M. Howard, of Mound Bayou, Miss., disclosed that the FBI has held preliminary inquires into two recent Negro deaths, and conducted a full investigation in a third.

The FBI chief cited statements attributed to Dr. Howard derogatory to the FBI. Dr. Howard was credited with declaring that confidential information is "leaked" from FBI offices, resulting in "pressures" on witnesses in slaying cases, where Negroes have been the victim.

Hoover took specific exception to a statement attributed to Dr. Howard in an address before a Baltimore audience in which Howard was quoted as saying: "We must find out why Southern investigators can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved."

Replying to charges attributed to Dr. Howard, Hoover said the FBI conducted inquires into the kid-nap murder of Emmett Till, near Money Mississippi, last August, and the shooting or Lamar Smith, at Brookhaven, Miss., August 13. A full investigation was conducted into the ambush slaying of the Rev. George Lee at Belzoni, Miss., May 7, 1955, Hoover said.

In a letter to Dr. Howard, released by the FBI office in Memphis, Hoover said all the inquiries were directed by the Justice Department. He said in the Till case "the facts did not indicate a violation of any Federal statute." In the Smith case the Justice Department, acting on facts developed at a preliminary inquiry, advised no investigation should be conducted.

HOOVER SAID:

"The criminal division requested full investigation into the death of Lee. Such an investigation was immediately conducted and facts as developed submitted to the department of justice."

In a letter to Dr. T. R. M. Howard, of Mound Bayou, Miss., president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, Hoover said:

"I do not propose to permit false charges made against this bureau to go unchallenged."

HOWARD TO REPLY

Reached in Los Angeles, Dr. Howard told the Memphis Commercial Appeal he would have a full statement later on Hoover's demand that he submit evidence on his charges or publicly retract them.

The "intemperate and baseless charges" Hoover's letter cited were in connection with the "slayings of Emmett Till, Rev. George Wesley Lee and Lamar Smith."

The FBI chief particularly resented Dr. Howard's publicized statement, in regards to three recent slayings, that: "We must find out why Southern investigators of the FBI can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved."

NO BASIS FOR ACTION

Hoover said a full and impartial investigation was made in every case, at the direction of the Department of Justice, and the department decided civil rights were not involved.

Dr. Howard, president of the National Medical Association, heads Friendship Clinic in Mound Bayou, the Nation's only all-Negro town, located in the Mississippi delta, about 70 miles south of Memphis. He recently sold his 720-acre plantation near Mound Bayou for about $150,000, but still owns other real estate in the area.

Negro Leader Won't Retract FBI Criticism

World Telegram + Sun P. 11 Fri. 1-27-56

By the Associated Press

LOS ANGELES, Jan. 20.— American citizens are being wantonly murdered in Mississippi and their murderers are going unpunished, Negro leader Dr. T. R. M. Howard said yesterday in a letter to FBI chief J. Edgar Hoover.

In reply to a letter from Mr. Hoover, Dr. Howard also said: "The fact remains that the FBI cannot seem to solve a crime where a Negro is murdered by a white man in Mississippi."

Mr. Hoover had accused Dr. Howard, president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, of "false and irresponsible" charges against the FBI's handling of several racial killings in the southern state.

Dr. Howard repeated in the letter statements which he said he made in a Baltimore speech. He also wrote that he has talked with "many thousands of persons" in the past month and:

"They are as dismayed as I am that murders can be committed in the United States and that murderers can escape indictment, as in the George Lee and Lemar Smith cases, or win acquittal as in the Emmett Till case, when, as in all of these cases, the facts about the cases are so well known to law enforcement authorities, federal as well as state."

Howard Favors Federal Troops

Herald Tribune Feb. 19 1956

NEW YORK, N. Y., Mar. 19— (Special)—Dr. T. R. M. Howard, militant Negro leader from Mississippi told a press conference in New York March 8 that he was for use of federal troops to enforce the constitutional rights of the Negro people in the South. Dr. Howard said: "I believe the federal government should issue an ultimatum to the South or the President or the Department of Justice should make a very strong statement. Then if there is no compliance federal troops should be sent."

Will probably locate in Chicago, Mrs. Howard says

Chicago Tribune Fri. 4-6-56

Los Angeles, Calif.

Dr. Theodore R. M. (for Mason) Howard will probably locate his family and the center of his operations in Chicago, "although I'd like to be here really," his wife, a native Californian, told the Tribune Wednesday by telephone from the LaBrea district apartment she set up when, at the height of the Mississippi terrorism, the California-trained medico sent her out of Mounl Bayou.

P. 10

Presently about half sold out in Mississippi, a sale reportedly in six figures, Dr. Howard will eventually locate in Chicago or New York, his wife said; and she and their adopted son Barrett 17 months, presumably will follow him.

At present, the militant Mississippian is hopping around the country like a giant grasshopper, attending to his many interests, business and otherwise.

Tuesday night he called his wife from New York; he spent Thursday and (today) Friday in Boston, will be in Chicago on the weekend, will attend the Tuskegee Clinic next week, aud will commence a six-city speaking tour of Ohio next weekend.

But Mississippi hasn't seen the last of the militant Negro leader. At least once a month, traveling incognito, he has to slip back into the state to attend to his business there, which includes their farm and other real property, membership on three boards, including a hospital which he established in the all-Negro town of Mississippi.

The tension in Mississippi is just as great as before the eyes of the world moved to Montgomery, Ala., Mrs. Howard said. For that reason, her husband never lets any of the whites know he is there. He never drives a car in Mississippi; but rides around the state in trucks and other inconspicuous conveyances.

Dr. Howard is expected to visit Jackson, Miss. openly, however, within a few months when the Regional Council of Negro Leadership, which he founded to combat the influence against the Negroes of the White Citizens Councils, holds its national convention.

COLEMAN SCORED BY NEGRO LEADER

Times Picayune New Orleans, La. Oct. 4-28-56

NAACP Urged 'to Go Underground' If Banned

By KEITH FULLER

JACKSON, Miss., April 27 (AP)—A wealthy Mississippi Negro leader told a wildly cheering audience Friday that if the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People is outlawed Dr. T. R. M. Howard, whose home is Mound Bayou, Miss., and Washington D. C., defiantly shouted, "If J. P. Coleman wants tranquil race relations in Mississippi, let him:

"Give the Negro the right to vote.

"Give him equal job opportunity

"Stop violating the 14th and 15th amendments.

"Accept the US supreme court decision on integration and stop talking about 'Mississippi will never integrate.'"

The audience roared then when he said "if Mississippi stays in the Union, it is going to do like every other state."

Howard addressed the afternoon session of the Regional Council of Negro Leadership of which he is the president. At least 600 Negroes attended the afternoon session doubling the size of the morning crowd.

Howard said the hall was not filled because of fear.

'Conquered by Fear'

"Since the first boatload of Negroes landed at Jamestown the white South has conquered the Negro by fear," he said.

The speaker, interrupted countless times by swells of applause, told the Negroes "we must stop lying to the Mississippi white man.

"Let's stop lying a bout you don't want to be free. Tell him you want anything any other free American has. . . . Report every act against us to the Justice Department in Washington. Go to a notary and swear to what they do when you go to the courthouse to register to vote.

"If they outlaw the NAACP; let's go underground."

Highway patrolmen and city police were stationed outside the Negro Masonic Temple where the council met. No disturbances were reported.

Earlier the meeting adopted unanimously a resolution condemning Gov. Coleman for telegraphing Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D-N.Y.) and Rev. Martin Luther King, Montgomery, Ala., bus boycott leader, to postpone their announced speeches before the council Friday.

Neither Powell nor King had actually accepted the invitations and said they had prior commitments. But the resolution said the telegrams were an invitation to violence had they showed up.

Coleman Condemned

The resolution condemned Coleman for calling Mississippi's present race relations "tranquil" and called upon him to take notice of the unrest among Mississippi Negroes. It asked him to create a bi-racial committee to lesson race tension. Coleman was out of Jackson for the day and could not be reached for comment.

Howard said Mississippi has always had a bad name in race relations. He said, "Even Negroes from Georgia think they are in Heaven compared to you in Mississippi."

He said people considered Mississippi the "hell-hole of the nation."

Howard in a faracial vein said that Gov. Coleman's action in wiring Powell and King made him executive director of the Negro council. As such he said Coleman is "the first man in Mississippi to hold membership in the White Citizens Council and the Negro Council of Leadership at the same time."

The Negro traced recent slayings in Mississippi and said his driver told him that the state had law to protect game and other wildlife but "it's open season on snakes and Negroes all the time."

Defends NAACP

Howard defended the NAACP and said he was a member and would be until his death. He said the white people had poved to him the NAACP is necessary to help fight the Negroes' cause.

At one point he shouted:

"Negroes, aren't you tired of all this treatment?"

The crowd roared "yes" and a woman screamed, "my God, yes."

"Negroes, do you really want to be free?"

The applause and yells were louder.

He told them to get the right to vote if they wanted to win the battle.

Howard said Gov. Coleman and the Legislature had "forced the issue of integration," which would be won by the Negroes.

The speaker said he, personally would not be in Mississippi all of the time because sometimes "it is necessary to change stations to carry on a fight."

In its financial report the council revealed that people from Chicago, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Gary, Ind., and New York had donated supplies of food and clothing worth about $50,000 for distribution among Negroes who were victims of economic pressure The pressure was not defined.

$1000 in Escrow

It also revealed that the council had put $1000 in escrow for use by the NCAAP to fight Mississippi segregation school cases. a Montgomery, Ala., Negro minister who was one of 25 indicted in connection with the bus boycott told the Mississippi audience to get the ballot at all costs.

Rev. B. T. Lamberth said the Montgomery bus boycott was successful because 50,000 Negroes acted as a unit.

He said the Montgomery Negroes would never again ride Jim Crow busses.

Mississippi is ripe for trouble!

DR. T. R. M. HOWARD

WASHINGTON

"Mississippi is ripe for trouble and any day may be it."

Such was the grim prophecy made here in the nation's capital by one of the leaders of the organization headed by Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss.

Reference was to a telegram which Mississippi's Governor, J. P. Coleman, sent Congressman Adam Clayton Powell, advising him (Powell) not to fulfill speaking engagements in the state.

GOVERNOR Coleman's wire to the Congressman was:

"Because of your record and the nature of race relations in Mississippi, I advise you to postpone your speaking engagement here indefinitely."

Boiled down in its own juices, Coleman's wire is nothing less than a threat of violence against Powell, a member of the United States Congress.

Since Coleman is the Chief Executive of the state this also means that Mississippi is "off limits" for all members of Congress who advocate abolition of racial segregation.

CARRIED A step farther, it means that even Justices of the U.S. Supreme Court and, perhaps, the President himself would be in danger of physical danger if they went to the Magnolia State and advocated application of the U.S. Constitution.

As serious as these conclusions are, there is a more significant aspect to the Mississippi Governor's wire to Congressman Powell.

It bares to all the world the true character of the state government.

IT EXPLAINS at last the forces behind the murder of 14-year-old Emmett Till, last summer.

It proves conclusively that the subsequent trial and exoneration of the youngster's admitted killers were no accident.

MOREVER IT is official evidence (bearing the state seal) that the government in Mississippi today has no basis in law and order.

Rather, it is a white supremacy dictatorship which is owned, approval of the political murderserated and controlled by pro-se-

Rev. George Lee of Belzoni, the attempted assassination of Gus Court of Humphries County and the courthouse murder of Lamar Smith at Brookhaven, Miss.

It is tacit ap-

gregationists.

* * *

DR. HOWARD offers an accurate analysis of the Mississippi Governor's purpose in sending the wire to Congressman Powell.

Said He: "It's a desperate attempt to drain the last vestige of freedom from colored citizens of Mississippi."

This, also, is an apt description of the apparent goal of the government in Mississippi today.

Governor Coleman and the entire Mississippi delegation to Coingress (led by Senator James O. Eastland) are trying desperately to crush the life from the movement seeking an end to racial segregation.

They have and are applying political and economic pressure to the hilt.

* * *

NOW THEY have just about reached the stage where they are about ready to apply brute force.

Early last fall this column predicted that umess the Federal Government does something to prevent them, there will be race riots in Mississippi this summer.

So far, nothing has been done.

And, as the Mississippi leader stated here on Tuesday. "This may be it." For there is no denying, the state is ripe for trouble.

Negro Leader Raps Critic of NAACP

Cincinnati, Ohio
Times-Star
June 20, 1956

CINCINNATI, June 20 (AP).—A Negro leader yesterday called the board chairman of the United States Chamber of Commerce a member of "second class citizenry."

Washington, D.C.

Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss., a member of the board of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, made the statement as he came here to speak at the convention of the United Packinghouse Workers of America. The statement came in an interview with a Cincinnati newspaper reporter.

Dr. Howard said he referred to a statement by Boyd Campbell of the United States Chamber that the NAACP was causing "a halt in progress of racial understandings."

"Unfortunately," said Dr. Howard, "Mr. Campbell comes from that second class citizenry who are satisfied that 986,000 Negroes in Mississippi be discriminated against." Dr. Howard asserted that Negroes in Mississippi "have the right to fight but not to vote."

NEW York — "We've been 93 most gradual in waiting years, since the signing of the Emancipation Proclamation. We can't wait another minute. We've waited too long already."

That's the answer given by Dr. T. R. M. Howard, president of the Mississippi Council of Negro Leadership, on his feelings toward "gradual integration" asked here last week.

At a press conference held at Hotel Theresa, he said, "the only real solution to desegregation of public schools and winning equal rights for colored persons in the South is "to send Federal troops."

He told newsmen that the Department of Justice should issue an "ultimatium" ordering the South to abide by the U.S. Supreme Court rulings.

Conscience Hurting?

Jackson, Miss.

Sat. 8-4-56

The FBI has suddenly become super-sensitive to criticism. Stung by charges of laxity over crimes involving Negroes in the South, J. Edgar Hoover, the director, has demanded that Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mississippi either support or retract his specific accusation that the bureau leaked information about Negro slayings in Mississippi.

We believe there is ample evidence to support allegations of terrorism and violence against Negroes all throughout the South. Nobody needs to consult any law books to prove this. In Mississippi, helpless Negro citizens are existing under a state of anarchy and fear, such as has never been seen in the darkest dungeons behind the Iron Curtain.

Sat. 1-28-56

The FBI has said time after time that it had no authority to go in and investigate cases like that of the brutal lynching of 14-year old Emmett Louis Till. This leaves Negro citizens in the position of being without protection either from local and state authorities nor from the Federal government itself. Where, then, are they to turn to?

Chicago Sun

If consciences are being stung, these are hopeful signs that instead of indifference to brutality, maybe at long last some laws can be passed and the machinery provided so the FBI can have no excuse for not moving into Mississippi, and any place else where they are needed.

Mr. Hoover is riding the wrong horse when he castigates Dr. Howard for saying what are the thoughts of decent people all over the country. "Where is the FBI? Can't they do something about this?"

Advocate
Sat. 1-28-56

In the widely reported letter of FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover charging Dr. T. R. M. Howard, the Mound Bayou physician, with making false and irresponsible charges against the FBI, Mr. Hoover confirms what has long been evident to us, that in his penchant for public speaking and public acclaim, goaded on by the applause of the oft times deluded masses, the doctor allows a highly vivid imagination to supply the word picture for statements and prognostigations which would never be made by one with the proper understanding of the responsibility of Leadership and the art of statesmanship and diplomacy.

Jackson, Miss.

The only tragedy about the many unsupported statements and prognostigations made by the doctor is, that in the circumstances in which they now find themselves, such statements and prognostigations only serve to pile more coals of fire upon the heads of the more or less innocent Negro masses, thirsty for honest and sincere leadership and direction.

While much of the damage from such statements and prognostigations, in the matter of harmonious and progressive race relations in this state has already been done, we say in reference to Mr. Hoovers letter to, and charge against the doctor, better late than never.

Chicago, Ill., July 30.—(DSN)—Dr. T. R. M. Howard, the fabulous Mound Bayou, Miss., Negro physician, founder of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, and several other now more or less defunct business and fraternal organizations in the Mississippi delta, whose home, fashioned after that of an English squire, was the number one show place of the Mississippi Delta and the all-Negro town of Mound Bayou, according to reports was rushing at full speed here last week establishing a medical clinic on the southside in order to establish himself as a resident of the state of Illinois.

According to reports, what was causing all the rush was the fact that the doctor had only fifteen days left to meet the one-year requirement of residence for citizenship, in order to participate in the elections here next year.

According to reports, the doctor, who sold his fabulous estate, and quit his many business and fraternal connections in Mississippi, following the U. S. Supreme Court decision in the school segregation case, to become a national crusader for civil rights, is now planning to enter the field of politics with Chicago as the base of his operations.

When announcing some months ago that he was leaving Mississippi mainly because of threats against his life as a result of his civil rights crusade, the doctor announced that he would keep his residence in the State of Mississippi but would spend most of his time in California, New York, and Washington, D. C.

Advocate

The doctor, who reliable reports from Mississippi say, has never cast a vote in the state, according to reports here has pledged his allegiance to the Republican Party, and is planning to run for Congress from Chicago in the election next year in an effort to unseat the veteran Chicago Negro Congressman, William L. Dawson, who is Vice-Chairman of the Democrat National Committee.

Proclaiming himself as a Democrat during all the years while in Mississippi, the doctor got his first look at the workings of top level politics in 1952, when Percy Greene, editor of the Jackson Advocate, and founder-president of the Mississippi Negro Democrats Association, through Congressman Dawson arranged to have him attend the Democrat National Convention along with several other Mississippi Negro leaders.

According to reports the doctor's activities are being watched with a great deal of interest by friends of Congressman Dawson and Negro Democrat leaders here.

Educator Urges Harmony Through Race Separation

Sat. 7-27-56

MOUND BAYOU, Miss.—Dr. J. H. White, president of Mississippi Vocational college at Itta Bena, last week urged continued racial harmony through the maintenance of segregation.

The Mississippi educator spoke to thousands of Negroes attending the 69th anniversary of the founding of Mound Bayou, an all-Negro town. Dr. White was quoted as saying:

"Negroes of the South should have the intelligence to size up the situation and not throw away schools by attempting to disrupt peaceful conditions which have existed for so many years . . . just to eat, sit and ride beside a white person."

Dr. White also ripped Rep. Adam Powell for an integration amendment to a federal aid bill for school construction. He said the amendment caused defeat of the bill.

MOUND BAYOU, Miss., July 13 (U.P.)—A Negro educator urged members of this all-Negro community not to throw away your schools just to eat, sit and ride beside a white person.

Dr. H. H. White, president of Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes at Itta Bena, called on members of his race to "continue racial harmony through segregation."

White was here for a celebration marking the 69th anniversary of the founding of Mound Bayou.

He blamed Negro Congressman Adam Clayton Powell of New York for defeat of the federal school aid bill by attaching an integration amendment to the measure.

Powell "will be held responsible for retarding thousands of children in this country," White said.

MEMPHIS, June 28 (U.P.) — A Negro college president charged that Rep. Adam Clayton Powell (D., N. Y.) was hurting the South-ern Negro in pushing for integration.

Dr. J. H. White, president of Mississippi Vocational College for Negroes, said in a telephone interview that the Negro legislator does not know the real conditions which exist in the South.

White said he believed institutions for Negroes only, such as his school, should be left as they are.

White said Powell would do away with such Negro institutions as Negro spirituals, and would cause the race a great loss.

"They (the spirituals) are a part of our heritage which have brought us as far as we are now," said White.

Nashville's Popular "Herbert White" Making Headlines Down In Mississippi

Globe & Independent
Nashville, Tenn.

The Dr. J. H. White who has come out in favor of the continuance of racial segregation in the schools of Mississippi, and is rated one of the most successful educators of that state, is much better known in Nashville and other parts of Tennessee than he possibly can be in any part of Mississippi.

"Herbert White" is the name he is best known by in Tennesse. Included in any biography that might be written about him would be the following facts:

7-27-56

He graduated from A&I when the institution was known as a college and was inspired by the late Dr. W. J. Hale to go forth in his state an engage in building a school where none of consequencies existed.

He chose whiteville, down in West Tennessee near McKenzie. There he built a high school of considerable prestige. During that period he was elected to the presidency of the Tennessee Negro Education Association, which later has changed its name to Tennessee Educational Congress.

He barely missed being chosen president of Alcorn College the landgrant college of Mississippi, some ten years ago and a short time thereafter he was elected president of Lane College a CME institution located in Jackson Tenn.

He resigned the presidency of Lane College to accept the presidency of Mississippi Vocational College and educational institution which the state built by making an outlay of eight million dollars as the initial payment on the big plant.

White got his master's degree and doctorate at Columbia and taught at Fisk University during summer sessions.

"Shrewd operator" is the term which persons who best know Dr White call him.

They predict he will prove this down in Mississippi by rubbing the educational politicians the right way.

It is recalled that "Herbert White" grew up around Gallatin and like present-day youths of that town, he once played in the Sunday School Congress Band, and traveled to various parts of the country with Dr. Henry Allen Boyd, whom he calls upon whenever he is in Nashville. He is related to Mr. J. W. Frierson, retired head of the Frierson Realty Company here.

Recently Dr. White made headlines, both favorable and unfavorable when he came out in favor of a continuance of segregation in an address delivered at a commencement in Mound B[illegible], Miss.

J. Edgar Hoover Disappoints Us

We have long been an admirer of J. Edgar Hoover and his great work with the FBI, so our disappointment is all the keener in the attitude he has taken in his current controversy with Dr. T. R. M. Howard of Mound Bayou, Miss.

Kansas City, Mo.

Hoover takes time out to write a long letter to Dr. Howard in answer to charges the Mississippian made against the FBI in several speeches around the country. It is strange, but we do not recall any instance (and if our memory is faulty, please correct us, Mr. Hoover) in which the distinguished chief of the FBI took time to make a public explanation, over his signature, of why the FBI could not enter the Emmett Till case nor any of the other cases of brutality and torture which have occurred in Mississippi in recent months.

Call Sun. 1-27-56 P.18

When the body of 14-year-old Till was pulled from the Tallahatchie river last August, citizens all over the country, white as well as black, begged the FBI to take a hand. The N.A.A.C.P. made many urgent pleas both to the FBI and to the Department of Justice. Not a word was heard from Mr. J. Edgar Hoover. Finally after many, many days had passed and after Mississippi had started its own processes of law which were to end with the clearing of the two men who admittedly took the boy from his uncle's home in the middle of the night, someone in the Justice department "explained" that the federal government could not enter the case because no federal law had been violated. But not a word was heard at that time from Mr. Hoover.

The Negro people of the country and, particularly of Mississippi, would have felt some degree of consolation had the FBI chief himself explained to them why the great FBI men could not take a hand in the Till case—and the George Lee case—and the Lamar Smith murder—all occurring in Mississippi.

In his letter to Dr. Howard, Mr. Hoover says that the FBI did make preliminary investigations in all of those cases but that the Justice department decided not to prosecute. Even that fact, had it been made known earlier by the FBI chief, would have helped the people of Mississippi understand that they were not being deserted entirely by the federal government.

The head of the FBI also told Dr. Howard that the FBI was responsible for the great reduction of lynchings in this country and for wiping out the Ku Klux Klan. Well! Again we do not recall a single instance in which the FBI tracked down and brought to justice the guilty parties in a lynching.

It has been our belief that it was the relentless fight which the N.A.A.C.P. and the Negro press waged against lynching and the nation-wide agitation on the part of the N.A.A.C.P. for the passage of a federal anti-lynching bill which finally rid the country of the evil. The late Walter White risked his life many a time to go into a lynch town right after a mob had taken the life of a Negro victim—ofttimes innocent—in order to get the real facts. But despite information which he uncovered, the lynchers went free, the victims meeting death "at the hands of party or parties unknown." Where was the FBI then?

The fight for an anti-lynching bill dominated many sessions of Congress in the '20's and the early '30's. The fight was led by the N.A.A.C.P.

The FBI did go after the Klan in a number of states in recent years and has been responsible for the conviction of a number of leaders of the hooded order in South Carolina, Georgia and other states. But, again unless our memory fails us, this happened only after the KKK began to attack white citizens.

We cannot agree with Mr. Hoover that Dr. Howard's statements are entirely "false and irresponsible." Dr. Howard speaks with the background of one who has lived in Mississippi for years and has seen first-hand the results of Mississippi terror on his people. Dr. Howard knew personally the two men whose deaths preceded that of Emmett Till. He was on the scene when J. W. Milam and Roy Bryant were tried and acquitted of Emmett Till's murder although they were postively identified and even admitted that they took the boy out of his uncle's house by force. Eye-witnesses said they saw them beat the boy whose body later was dragged from the river.

Dr. Howard has witnessed all of this while the FBI remained silent as far as the public was concerned. Mr. Hoover made a nation-wide plea recently for the citizens of this country to stop referring to officers of the law as "cops." A similar strongly-worded plea by the FBI chief to law-enforcement officers of the South to be more vigorous in their prosecution of men like Bryant and Milam would help prevent Mr. Hoover and the FBI from getting the type of criticism that Dr. Howard has heaped upon them.

Dr. Howard Blasts FBI, Hoover Rages

Defender Sat. 1-28-56 P.1

Chicago, Ill.

J. Edgar Hoover was raging mad this week over charges made by Dr .T. R. M. Howard that the FBI hadn't done an effective job in probing the Mississippi reign of terror against Negroes.

Howard, who has been the most outspoken Negro leader against Mississippi racial injustice, reiterated his charges after Hoover last week challenged him to "put up or shut up."

In a letter to Dr. Howard that was released to the press even before Dr. Howard received it, the FBI boss called the charges "irresponsible and false."

Contacted in Los Angeles Thursday, Dr. Howard told the Defender in a telephone interview that he had not received the FBI's letter. However, he said he refused to recant any of the charges he had made against the FBI and added:

The FBI chief quoted Howard as declaring that confidential information is "leaked" from FBI offices, resulting in "pressures" on witnesses in Negro slaying cases.

Another statement attributed to Dr. Howard was that "we must find out why southern investigators can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved."

DENIES BOTH CHARGES

Hoover denied both charges and declared that the FBI has held preliminary inquiries into two recent Negro deaths and conducted a full investigation into a third.

Hoover said an inquiry into the alleged kidnap-murder of 14-year-old Emmett Till of Chicago near Money, Miss., last August, showed that "the facts did not indicate a violation of any federal statute."

In the shooting of Lamar Smith at Brookhaven, Miss.. Aug. 13, Hoover stated the Justice Department, acting on facts developed at a preliminary inquiry, advised no investigation should be conducted.

The FBI head said a full investigation was conducted into the ambush slaying of Rev. George Lee at Belzoni, Miss., May 7, 1955, and facts as developed were submitted to the Justice Department.

Chicago, Ill.

Contacted in Los Angeles, Thursday, Dr. Howard told the Defender in a telephone interview that he had not received the FBI's letter. However, he said he refused to recant any of the charges he had made against the FBI and added:

"It is strange that Mr. Hoover instead of assuring the terrorized Negroes in Dixie that they can receive protection and can get justice, prefers to make a personal attack upon me which seems to be politically inspired."

Hoover has denied that any of the killings in Mississippi which Dr. Howard accused the FBI of failing to probe, were federal cases and said that they had been investigated to ascertain that fact.

However, Dr. Howard said he can give Hoover specific examples of cases where Negroes were intimidated at the polls which certainly a federal violation.

He said that to clear itself in the state, the FBI had an agent in Mississippi try to get a Negro sign an affidavit that the FBI in Mississippi was fair in its dealings in cases where Negroes and whites were involved.

Dr. Howard has charged that FBI agents in Mississippi are from that state and naturally are partial to whites. He declared:

"I will stand on the national capitol and tell Hoover that we don't feel that to take a man who has been brought up in an environment such as we have in Mississippi and give him a few weeks of years of training is going to change the individual into a fair and impartial investigator where the two races are involved.

"In each of my references to the FBI, I have praised the organization as being greatest crime detecting force earth. But I have not felt that all that the government can do has done in the recent mass killings and intimidation of Negro voters at the polls in Mississippi.

"It might be of interest to Hoover to know that millions of Americans join me in this feeling."

J. Edgar Hoover Resents Statements Made by Physician

LOS ANGELES.—(ANP)—Despite a protest from FBI Director J. Edgar Hoover, Dr. T. R. M. Howard said he is sticking to his charges that the FBI has been lax in solving Mississippi racial killings.

"It is strange that Mr. Hoover, instead of assuring the terrorized Negroes in Dixie that they can receive protection and can get justice, he prefers to make personal attack at me which seems to be politically inspired," Dr. Howard said during an interview.

Hoover, in a letter released Wednesday by the FBI office at Memphis, accused the Mound Bayou, Miss., physician of "false and irresponsible" statements against the FBI and demanded that he prove or retract them.

Resents Public Statement

The FBI director particularly resented Dr. Howard's public statement, in regard to the recent slaying of three Negroes in Mississippi, that:

"We must find out why southern investigators of the FBI can't seem to solve a crime where a Negro is involved."

Hoover denied the charge and said that his agents held "full and impartial investigations" in every case, at the direction of the Department of Justice, and found that no civil rights violations were involved.

Dr. Howard, president of the Mississippi Regional Council of Negro Leadership, insisted that FBI agents in Mississippi are from that state and naturally are partial to whites. He declared:

Pri. 1-27-56 Kansas City, Mo.

Can't Change Individual

"I will stand on the national capitol and tell Hoover that we don't feel that to take a man who has been brought up in an environment such as we have in Mississippi and give him a few weeks or years of training is going to change the individual into a fair and impartial investigator where the two races are involved."

Dr. Howard said he has often praised the FBI as the "greatest crime detecting force on earth."

"But I have not felt that all that the government can do has been done in the recent mass killings and intimidations of Negro voters at the polls in Mississippi," he added.

The Negro civil rights leader, after Hoover's letter was read to him by phone, said:

"If the charge is false, then it is my belief that the murderers of Rev. Lee and the individuals who seriously wounded Gus Courts on Nov. 25 should be brought to justice."

The "intemperate and baseless charges" which Hoover's letter cited were in connection with the slayings of Emmett Till, Rev. George Wesley Lee and Lamar Smith.

Till, a 14-year-old Chicago youth, was kidnapped at Money, Miss., and killed last August after he allegly wolf-whistled and made "insulting remarks" to a white woman. The woman's husband, Roy Bryant, and brother-in-law, J. W. Milam, were acquitted of a charge that they murdered Till. An all-white jury also refused to indict the pair on the kidnap charge.

Smith, who had been active in getting Negroes to register and vote in Mississippi, was shot to death Aug. 13 in the town square at Brookhaven. A white man was arrested but the grand jury complained it could not indict him because no witnesses could be found.

Lee, head of the Belzoni, Miss., NAACP chapter, was found dead in his wrecked car May 7 with gunshot wounds allegedly made by white men.

Voice of the People . . . What Courier Readers Think

Courier, P. 9 Sat. 6-9-56

To the Editors: Pittsburgh, Pa.

Thank you for sending me copies of your paper containing replies from Negro leaders to my "Letter to the North" in LIFE, and to the statement accredited to me that I myself would shoot down human beings (Negroes) in the street. The statements in the "Letter to the North" are, I still believe, valid statements in that they state not a moral or ethical but simply a practical condition which exists and must be considered in the abolishing of the moral and ethical wrong of compulsory segregation, if violence is to be avoided.

Faulkner—DuBois

The statement implying that I myself would "shoot down Negroes" is wrong. Even if I could have reversed and abandoned my position regarding compulsory segregation which has been on record ever since the Supreme Court's decision and privately long before that, I would not have made such a public statement as the above, for the very reason that Bishop Allen states, and which I myself made in letters to the magazine where the statement was reported: that such a statement would be an encouragement and incitement to the minority of white people who still believe such a condition could come to pass. I would like to correct two errors in your box of questions from the LIFE article. I refer you to the article itself:

> Faulkner: The white majority may be forced to join the segregation minority, no matter how much they (the minority) are opposed to the principle of inequality.
> Faulkner concludes: (Let the fanatic Southerner see that, (1) Nobody is going to force integration on him from the outside; (2) that he himself faces an obsolescence in his own land which only he can cure (if violence is to be prevented).

The parentheses are mine; the (statement) on inequality is from the article.

The Challenge of Dr. DuBois

To the Editor:

Dr. W. E. B. DuBois again comes forward as a magnificent champion of national morality and integrity devoid of the terrible malignancy of color prejudices, through his splendid challenge to debate William Faulkner on the great issue of desegregation. The statement of William Faulkner that if the chips were down, and "if it came to fighting I'd fight for Mississippi against the United States, even if it meant going out into the street and shooting Negroes," reveals but one facet of the terrifying poison white supremacists have injected into the blood stream of the nation. The prevalence of this evil within our country has placed a great handicap upon effective foreign relations.

The hatred of American racist ideology is international in scope. Innumerable leaders testify to this fact. So also does our strained relations with all colonial peoples. The Supreme Court's desegregation decision has been a smashing blow to all legal shibboleths and precedents which make mockery of constitutional liberties. The moral lesson of the Faulkner debacle must now be contemplated. They cannot be ignored.

The refusal of William Faulkner to debate Dr. DuBois only reveals the necessity to initiate nation-wide forums, symposia and other discussions on this momentous issue. The continuance of the cult of white supremacy in any form is destructive of a national character all freedom-loving men can respect. We who claim moral leadership in a changing world and yet cannot ratify the Universal Declaration of Human Rights of the United Nations need to think deeply.

The moral depravity inherent in the cult of white supremacy ideas has nowhere been so starkly and nakedly revealed than in the position of William Faulkner, Nobel prize winner in literature. The time to launch a devastating crusade against this cult is now.

Faulkner Rejects Debate Invitation

Times-Picayune Fri. 4-20-56

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Va., April 19 (AP)—William Faulkner said that he had turned down an invitation from a Negro leader to debate the segregation issue on the courthouse steps at Sumner, Miss. New Orleans, La.

Dr. W. E. Dubois of Oakland, Calif., one of the founders of the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People, had challenged the Nobel prize winning author to a discussion of Faulkner's plea for moderation in solving the school problem. P. 34

Faulkner, on a visit to his daughter's home, said he had sent Dr. Dubois the following telegram:

"I don't believe there is any point for debate between us. We both agree in advance the position you take is right morally, legally and ethically.

"But if the Till case in Mississippi, the Lucy case in Alabama, the Negro householder in Chicago who has to have round-the-clock police protection to live in his own home and the Negro parents in Ohio who established a sitdown strike in the superintendent's office to compel the acceptance of their children in a white school, are not evidence to you that my position asking for moderation and patience is right, then we will waste our breath in debate."

Faulkner Urges Integrationists To Slow Up

Post-Herald
Birmingham, Ala.
Fri. 3-2-56

NEW YORK, March 1 (AP) — William Faulkner, Southern writer who was against compulsory segregation, says integration backers should slow up in their current campaign for immediate establishment of mixed schools in the South.

Writing in Life Magazine, he says:

P 12

"I would say to the NAACP (National Association for the Advancement of Colored People) and all the organizations who would compel immediate and unconstitutional integration:

"'Go slow now. Stop now for a time, a moment. You have the power now. You can afford to withhold for a moment the use of it as a force.

"You have done a good job, you have jolted your opponent off-balance and he now is vulnerable. But stop there for a moment; don't give him the advantage of a chance to cloud the issue by that purely automatic sentimental appeal to that same universal human instinct for automatic sympathy for the underdog simply because he is under.'"

Faulkner, a member of an old Mississippi family, says the Civil War failed to prove to the North "that the South will go to any length, even that fatal and already doomed one, before it will accept alternation of its racial condition by mere force of law or economic threat."

His article says swift integration and possible resulting violence might make the whole matter "one of the race," compelling the white minority like himself "to join the white segregation majority no matter how much we oppose the principle of inequality" and might force the Negro minority who want peace to join the Negro majority who advocate force.

"So the Northerner, the liberal, does not know the South," he writes. "He can't know it from his distance.

"So I would say to all the organizations and groups which would force integration on the South by legal process:

"'Stop now for a moment. You have shown the Southerner what you can do and what you will do if necessary; give him a space in which to get his breath and assimilate that knowledge; to look about and see that (1) nobody is going to force integration on him from the outside; (2) that he himself faces an obsolescense in his own land which he can not cure; a moral condition which not only must be cured but a physical condition which has got to be cured if he, the white Southerner, is to have any peace, is not faced with another legal process or maneuver every year, year after year, for the rest of his life."

Faulkner Says Bias May Be Boon To Reds

NEW YORK (INS) — Novelist William Faulkner said that racial equality had better be practiced throughout the world before communisim "befools and gets" the non-white peoples of the earth.

The Pulitzer prize-winning novelist from Misissippi further warned that unless racial equality is practiced, the world's "small hand full of white people" must ultimately face "the myriads of all the people on earth who are not white."
white."

Faulkner, writing on segregation in Harper's magazine, also said the world must "confederate, not as black people not as white people, but as people who are still free."

"And," the novelist continued, "we had better take in with us as many as we can get of non-white peoples of the earth who are not completely free yet, but who want to and intend to be; before that other force (communism,) which is opposed to individual freedom, befools and gets them."

Faulkner Clearly Defined Dixie Attitude on Integration

Wed. 3-14-56 P. 4
Atlanta, Ga.

William Faulkner has written a thoughtful letter to the North. The Nobel prize author from Mississippi, more in sorrow than anger, fears that Southern moderates like himself who had helped the Negro by the human instinct of championing "the underdog," may have to make a new choice.

This is to side with "that embattled white minority who are our blood and kin" because they have become the underdog since the Supreme Court decision.

Writing in Life magazine, Faulkner warns that many Southerners who were working patiently to help the Negro improve his condition rebel at forced integration. Like Robert E. Lee in 1860, who chose civil war rather than accept alteration of racial conditions by mere force of law or economic threat, Faulkner speaks for the moderates who would have to make a new choice.

Faulkner is right that the Northerner still does not know the South. He does not know that he is not dealing with a legal theory and a moral idea, but with a fact: "a fact of an emotional condition of such fierce unanimity . . . as to go to any length and against any odds" to justify and defend its right to it. Faulkner is not overstating the case and there is little question that he speaks for the South.

Faulkner's Dilemma

Courier 4/1/

William Faulkner, the distinguished Mississippi writer, truly finds himself in the middle these days. After throwing his powerful mind, heart and pen into the fray between the segregationists and the anti-segregationists, Faulkner finds "the reason" and "the reason behind the reason" swaying him first this way and then "that way."

Fitzsimmons Ala.

First, he wrote Life magazine that if the NAACP and such extremists didn't quit pushing him and other liberal Southerners, he and they might be forced to desert their middle ground and join the extreme segregationists.

He even went so far as to give off the impression that he might be forced to join the mob and shoot down Negroes. He denies he said anything like this.

In the current issue of Harper's magazine, Mr. Faulkner turns almost full circle around from the Life letter. Now he recognizes the "trouble" in the South to be based upon fear—fear of the Southern white man for the Southern black man.

Sat. 6-16-56

All this stuff about racial inferiority and intermarriage is a lot of baloney, Mr. Faulkner admits. What the white Southerner wars against, he now writes, is the dread prospect that the Southern Negro might become the banker, the plantation owner, the industrialist, and take over in the economic field. The "trouble" is economic.

We think Mr. Faulkner has something there. Also, when he writes that the few whites in the world had better find a common ground of freedom with the many coloreds if they are to escape Armageddon.

Faulkner Says Race Row Hinders Fight On Reds

Post-Herald
Fri. 6-1-56
Birmingham, Ala.

NEW YORK, May 31 (U.P.)—Author William Faulkner said today that this nation's failure to achieve Negro and white equality could destroy the one potent force against communism in the world today—the "simple belief of man that he can be free."

Faulkner, Mississippi writer who won the Nobel literature prize in 1949, said in an article in Harper's magazine that he had concluded while travelling in the non-Communist nations of the world that "it's because of America" that many of those nations remain free.

"These people still believe in the American dream; they do not know yet that something happened to it," he wrote.

"The countries which still are free of communism are still free simply because of that: That belief in individual liberty and equality and freedom which is the one idea powerful enough to stalemate the idea of Communism."

It is "the strongest force on earth and all we need to do is use it."

If the white man does not extend freedom to the colored man, Faulkner said, the battle against Communism may pale into a final confrontation—"the remaining handful of white people against the massed myriads of all the people on earth who are not white."

What Is Freedom Without Them?

The White Man Needs Friends

By William Faulkner

Pulitzer-prize winning author Faulkner delivered this address at the 21st annual meeting of the Southern Historical Association at Memphis.

FOR THE SAKE of argument, let's say that as a white Southerner or maybe even any white American, I, too, curse the day when the first Yankee shipmaster bought the first penful of Negro captives from the Arab dealer and brought them across the middle passage into American slavery.

Because that doesn't matter now. To live in the world of A.D. 1956 and be against equality of race or color is like living in Alaska and being against the snow. We have already got the snow; what we must do now is plan how to live with it. Live with it, not just beside it, because the day when that would have been enough is past, too.

Only this snow is a good deal more serious than the denial of an accomplished fact. To stand against equality on grounds of race or color can invite a situation in which the whole white and/or free world as we know it can disappear.

WE THINK of the world situation today as a precarious and explosive balance of two irreconcilable ideologies confronting each other; which precarious balance, once it totters, will drag the whole world into the abyss along with it.

That's not so. Only one of the forces is an ideology, an idea. Because the second force is the simple fact of man, the simple belief of individual man that he can and should and will be free.

And if we who so far are still free, want to continue to be free, all of us who are still free had better confederate, and confederate fast, with all others who still have a choice to be free— confederate not as black people nor white people nor pink nor blue nor green people, but as people who still are free with all other people who still are free; confederate together and stick together, too, if we want a world or even a part of a world in which individual men can be free, to continue to endure.

And we had better take in with us as many as we can get of the non-white peoples of the earth who are not completely free yet but who want to be and intend to be, before that other force which is opposed to individual freedom, befools and gets them.

TIME WAS when the non-white man was content to—anyway, did—accept his instinct for freedom as an unrealizable dream. But not any more; the white man himself taught him different with that phase of his—the white man's—own culture which took the form of colonial expansion and exploitation based and morally condoned on the premise of inequality not because of individual incompetence, but of mass race or color.

As a result of which, in only 10 years, we have watched the non-white peoples expel, by bloody violence when necessary, the white man from all of the Middle East and Asia which he once dominated. And into that vacuum has already begun to move that other and inimical power which people who believe in freedom are at war with— that power which says to the non-white man:

"We don't offer you freedom because there is no such thing as freedom; your white overlords whom you just threw out have already proved that to you. But we offer you equality; at least equality in slavedom; if you are to be slaves, at least you can be slaves to your own color and race and religion."

WE, the Western white man who does believe that there exists an individual freedom above and beyond this mere equality of slavedom, must teach the non-white peoples this while there is yet a little time left. We, America, who are the strongest force opposing Communism and monolithicism, must teach all other peoples, white and nonwhite, slave or (for a little while yet) still free.

We, America, have the best chance to do this because we can do it here, at home, without needing to send costly freedom expeditions into alien and inimical places already convinced that there is no such thing as freedom and liberty and equality and peace for all people, for we would practice it at home.

The best chance and the easiest job, because our non-white minority is already on our side; we don't need to sell them on America and freedom because they are already sold; even when ignorant from inferior or no education, even despite the record and history of inequality, they still believe in our concepts of freedom and democracy.

THAT IS WHAT America has done for them in only 300 years. Not to them; for them, because to our shame we have made little effort so far to teach them to be Americans, let alone to use their capacities to make ourselves a stronger and unified America—the people who, only 300 years ago, were eating rotten elephant and hippo meat in African rainforests, who lived beside one of the biggest bodies of inland water on earth and never thought of a sail, who yearly had to move by whole villages and tribes from famine and pestilence thinking of a wheel, yet in only 300 years in America produced Ralph Bunche and Booker T. Washington, and George Washington Carver; who have yet to produce a Fuchs or Rosenberg or Gold or Greenglass or Burgess or Meredith or Hiss, and for every prominent Communist or fellow-traveler like Robeson or Richard Wright, there are a thousand white ones.

I AM NOT convinced that the Negro wants integration in the sense that some of us claim to fear he does. I believe he is American enough to repudiate and deny by simple American instinct any stricture or regulation forbidding us to do something which in our opinion would be harmless if we did it, and which we probably would not want to do anyway.

I think that what he wants is equality, and I believe that he too knows there is no such thing as equality per se, but only equality TO—equal right and opportunity to make the best one can of one's life within one's capacity and capability, without fear of injustice or oppression or threat of violence.

If we had given him this equal right to opportunity 90 or 50 or even 10 years ago, there would have been no Supreme Court decision about how we run our schools.

It is our white man's shame that in our present Southern economy, the Negro must not have economic equality; our double shame that we fear that giving him more social equality will jeopardize his present economic status; our triple shame that even then, to justify ourselves, we must becloud the issue with the purity of white blood.

What a commentary that the one remaining place on earth where the white man can flee and have his blood protected by law, is Africa—the source and origin of the people whose presence in America will have driven the white man to flee from defilement.

SOON NOW all of us—not just Southerners nor even Americans, but all people who are still free and want to remain so—are going to have to make a choice.

We will have to choose not between color nor race nor religion, nor between East and West, either, but simply between being slaves and being free. And we will have to choose completely and for good.

The time is already past when we can choose a little of each, a little of both.

We can choose a state of slavedom, and if we are powerful enough to be among the top two or three or 10, we can have a certain amount of license— until someone more powerful rises, and has us machine-gunned against a cellar wall.

But we cannot choose freedom established on a hierarchy of degree of freedom, on a caste system of equality like military rank.

We must be free not because we claim freedom, but because we practice it. Our freedom must be buttressed by a homogeny equally and unchallengeably free, no matter what color they are, so that all the other inimical forces everywhere—systems political or religious or racial or national—will not just respect us because we practice freedom. They will fear us because we do.

NEGRO FLEXIBILITY URGED BY FAULKNER

Use Ghandi's Way, Writer Says In Article

CHICAGO, Aug. 5. (AP)—Author William Faulkner Sunday advised Negroes to "be flexible" in pressing for civil rights equality.

Writing in the September issue of Ebony, national Negro magazine, Mr. Faulkner proposed "Ghandi's way" as a method to guide anti-segregation efforts.

"If I were a Negro," the Mississippi novelist said, "I would advise our elders and leaders to make this our undeviating and inflexible course—a course of inflexible and unviolent flexibility directed against not just the schools, but against all the public institutions from which we are interdict, as is being done against the Montgomery, Ala., bus lines.

"But always with flexibility: Inflexible and undeviable only in hope and will but flexible to adapt to time and place and circumstance."

Mr. Faulkner said if he were a Negro "I would be a member of NAACP, since nothing else in our United States culture has yet held out to my race that much of hope.

"But I would remain only under conditions: That it recognize the most serious quantity in our problem which, so far as I know, it has not publicly recognized yet; that it make the same flexibility the watchword of its methods . . ."

The Pulitzer and Nobel Prize winner who has stirred controversy with several recent statements on the segregation issue lately, said that "above all, I would say this to the leaders of our race:

"'We must learn responsibility, the responsibility of equality.'"

He stressed a definition of equality as "the right to opportunity to be free and equal provided one is worthy of it, and will work to gain it, and then work to keep it."

ADVISES NEGROES —

Faulkner Will Take Up Residence at Virginia U.

Sunday Star 9-14-A
Washington, D.C.

CHARLOTTESVILLE, Oct. 6 (Special).—William Faulkner, Nobel prize winner in literature and one of America's major novelists, has accepted the invitation of the University of Virginia Department of English to become the first of what is planned as a series of writers-in-residence.

Mon. 10-7-56

Mr. Faulkner and his wife will leave the region of Northern Mississippi celebrated in his fiction and come to live in Charlottesville beginning in February. They expect to be near the University of Virginia during the whole of the second term of the 1956-57 session.

The establishment of the writer-in-residence series is made possible under a bequest of Mrs. Emily Clark Balch which provided that it be used to stimulate "appreciation and creation of American literature."

As writer-in-residence, Mr. Faulkner will visit English classes to answer questions about his books and about writing in general. While he is continuing to carry on his own work, he has agreed to consult with faculty members and with some students. He will also face the university public in several readings and informal talks.

Mr. Faulkner has been a frequent visitor to this community in recent years. His daughter, Jill, is the wife of Paul D. Summers, jr., a third-year student in the University Law School.

Negroes, If Forced By Pressure

Sep 3-17-56

Russell Warren Howe In The Reporter

¶ Howe, New York correspondent for the London Sunday Times, interviewed William Faulkner Feb. 21 on recent troubles in the South. The following is Howe's account of the interview as published in The Reporter magazine. Faulkner has long opposed compulsory segregation. In a recent issue of Life magazine, he expressed similar opposition to compulsory integration. Noting that the tactics of NAACP were forcing moderates into the camp of the white Southern extremists, Faulkner urged Negroes and liberals to ease the pressure on the South.—Ed.

"MY POSITION is this," said Mr. Faulkner. "My people owned slaves and the very obligation we have to take care of these people is morally bad. It is a position which is completely untenable. But I would wish now that the liberals would stop—they should let us sweat in our own tears for a little while. If we are pushed by the government we shall become an underdog people fighting back because we can do nothing else. Our position is wrong and untenable but it is not wise to keep an emotional people off balance.

FAULKNER

"The Negroes have had 90 years of that sort of life and now that they are winning it would take a lot of wisdom to say 'Go slow.' Perhaps it is too much to ask of them, but it is for their own sake. I have known Negroes all my life and Negroes work my land for me. I know how they feel. But now I have people who say they are Negroes writing to me and saying, 'You mean well for us but please hush. You mean good but you do harm.'"

The Long View

Q. Wouldn't a "go slow" strategy lose some of the ground already gained?

A. I don't know. I try to think of this in the long-term view. Now, I grant you that it is bad that there should be a minority people who because of their color don't have a right to social equality or to justice. But it is bad that Americans should be fighting Americans. That is what will happen because the Southern whites are back in the spirit of 1860. There could easily be another Civil War and the South will be whipped again.

In the long view, the Negro race will vanish in three hundred years by intermarriage. It has happened to every racial minority everywhere, and it will happen here.

Q. What would be the best strategy for the liberals?

A. Let the people stop awhile. If that girl Autherine Lucy goes back to Alabama University . . . she will be killed. The NAACP should forget about Alabama University. It should send people now to the Universities of Georgia, Mississippi, and South Carolina and let them be thrown out of each of those places, too, until the white people of the South get so sick and tired of being harassed and worried they will have to do something about it . . .

The South Is Armed

Q. Have you heard reports of arms buying in Tuscaloosa?

A. Yes. If that girl dies, two or three white men will be killed, then eight or nine Negroes. Then the troops will come in. You know, we've never had race riots in the South before. They've had race riots in the North but in the South we just have persecution.

The South is armed for revolt. After the Supreme Court decision [of May 17, 1954, on school integration] you couldn't get as much as a few rounds for a deer rifle in Mississippi. The gunsmiths were sold out. These white people will accept another Civil War knowing they're going to lose. If the North knew the South they would know that this is not a theory or a moral convention which they are up against but a simple fact. I know people who've never fired a gun in their lives but who've bought rifles and ammunition.

Q. How long do you think it will be before the concrete aspects of discrimination — in housing, employment, enfranchisement, education, social contacts—will have disappeared?

A. In the Deep South, I don't know. As it was, in 15 years the Negroes would have had good schools. Then came the decision of the Supreme Court and that will mean probably 20 years of trouble. I think that decision put the position of the Negro in the South back five years.

Q. Does that mean that you disapprove of the court decree?

A. I don't disapprove it. It had to be promulgated and it just repeated what was said in January, 1863. If white folks had given Negroes proper schools there would have been no need for the court's decision.

The Negro in the Deep South doesn't want to mix with the white man. He likes his own school, his own church. Segregation doesn't have to imply inferiority.

Take Off The Pressure

Q. How would you re-educate the Southern white to a different way of thinking?

A. First of all, take off the pressure. Let him see just how untenable his position is. Let him see that people laugh at him. Just let him see how silly and foolish he looks. Give him time—don't force us. If that girl goes back to Tuscaloosa she will die. Then the top will blow off. The government will send in its troops and we shall be back at 1860. They must stop pushing these people. The trouble is the North doesn't know that country. They don't know the South will go to war.

Laughing At Montgomery

Q. The Negroes of Montgomery, the capital of Alabama, have been boycotting the city's buses since Dec. 5. Do you think this sort of passive resistance is a good idea?

A. Yes, anything they do is good as long as they don't carry it too far. Today the white women of Montgomery have to go and fetch their Negro cooks by car. It is a good step, to let the white folks see that the world is looking on and laughing at them.

But I don't like enforced integration any more than I like enforced segregation. If I have to choose between the United States government and Mississippi, then I'll choose Mississippi. What I'm trying to do now is not have to make that decision. As long as there's a middle road, all right, I'll be on it. But if it came to fighting I'd fight for Mississippi against the United States even if it meant going out into the street and shooting Negroes. After all, I'm not going out to shoot Mississippians.

Q. You mean white Mississippians?

A. No, I said Mississippians—in Mississippi the problem isn't racial. 90% of the Negroes are on one side with the whites, against a handful like me who believe that equality is important.

Q. Some of your remarks could eb interpreted as disapproval of the existence of militant Negro defense organizations. How do you feel about the NAACP?

A. That organization is necessary, but it must know when to let the opponent make the next move. 90 years of oppression and injustice are there, but it is a lot for the white man to have to admit. It takes an extremely intelligent man to stop dead after 90 years of wrongdoing, and the Southerner isn't that intelligent. He has to feel that what he is doing (when he reforms) is not being forced on him but is spontaneous. We have to make it so that he feels that he is being not just honest but generous. Give him time—right now it's emotional and he'll fight because the country's against him.

Q. In the European press, "go slow" is criticized on the grounds that the susceptibilities of the persecuted deserve more consideration than the susceptibilities of the persecutor. How would you answer that criticism?

A. The European critics are right, morally, but there is something stronger in man than a moral condition. Man will do certain things whether they be right or wrong. We know that racial discrimination is morally bad, that it stinks, that it shouldn't exist, but it does. Should we obliterate the persecutor by acting in a way that we know will send him to his guns, or should we compromise and let it work out in time and save whatever good remains in those white people?

I will go on saying that the Southerners are wrong and that their position is untenable, but if I have to make the same choice Robert E. Lee made then I'll make it. My grandfather had slaves and he must have known that it was wrong, but he fought in one of the first regiments raised by the Confederate army, not in defense of his ethical position but to protect his native land from being invaded.

Q. Do you believe regional loyalty is

'GROSSLY MISQUOTED'

OXFORD, Miss., March 16 (UP)—Novelist William Faulkner said today he apparently was "grossly misquoted" in the current issue of The Reporter magazine as saying he would fight for Mississippi against the United States if he had to choose.

"I did not see the magazine," Faulkner told UP, "but it was read to me over the telephone and quoted me as saying the South is armed to oppose integration and if I had to choose between the United States and Mississippi, I would choose Mississippi even to going out and shooting Negroes in the street.

"That's foolish. Of course, I didn't say that because I don't believe it's come to that. I don't know where that came from."

Faulkner said he did not remember talking to a reporter for the magazine. He said other portions of the article as read to him were correct, that he did believe the South would resist racial integration "by force and violence."

a good quality?

A. Well, you must believe in something.

Q. What about your belief in the principles expressed in your books?

A. I shouldn't be betraying them. My Negro boys down on the plantation would would fight against the North with me. If I say to them "Go get your shotguns, boys," they'll come.

Q. Is the basic cause of race prejudice economic, in your opinion?

A. Absolutely. To produce cotton we have to have a system of peonage. That is absolutely what is at the bottom of the situation.

Q. Are the psychological rationalizations for prejudice something grafted onto the economic root?

A. Yes. I would say that a planter who has 1,000 acres wants to keep the Negro in a position of debt peonage and in order to do it he is going to tell the poor class of white folks that the Negro is going to violate his daughter. But all he wants at the back of it is a system of peonage to produce his cotton at the highest rate of profit.

The Heritage Of Man

Q. Do you agree that the ambition spur provided by persecution has made the Negro potentially the more capable of the two "races" in the South?

A. Certainly. He's calmer, wiser, more stable than the white man. To have put up with this situation so long with so little violence shows a sort of greatness. Suppose two Negroes had murdered a white Emmett Till — there would have been a flood of emotionalism. The Negro rose above his anger. He knows that the problem [of his equality] will be solved because it must be. But these ignorant white people have got to be let alone so that they can think that they are changing on their own initiative.

The poor white man knows that although the Negro can only buy the worst land, has bad tools and inferior livestock, he can make a living better than white men could. With a little more social, economic, and educational equality the Negro will often be the landlord and the white man will be working for him. And the Negro won't come out on top because of anything to do with the race but because he has always gotten by without scope—when they are given scope they use it fully. The Negro is trained to do more than a white man can with the same limitations.

The vices that the Negro has have been created in him by the white man, by the system. He will make his own contribution to our society. Already his music and poetry have passed to the white man, and what the white man has done with them is not Negro any more but something else.

There is no such thing as an "Anglo-Saxon" heritage and an African heritage. There is the heritage of man. Nothing is extinct in any race, only dormant. You are brave and tough when you have to be. You are intelligent when the age demands it. There are al lthings in like degree in all races.

Faulkner warns NAACP: You've made point, go easy

News Birmingham Ala.

NEW YORK, March 1 — Mississippi's Nobel Prize winning author, William Faulkner, warns the NAACP and all the organizations and groups which would force integration on the South by legal process to "stop now for a moment." 3-1-56

"You have shown the Southerner what you can do and what you will do if necessary; give him a space in which to get his breath and assimilate that knowledge; to look about and see that (1) nobody is going to force integration on him from the outside; (2) that he himself faces an obsolescence in his own land which only he can cure; a moral condition which not only must be cured but a physical condition

WILLIAM FAULKNER

. . . Better go easy

which has got to be cured if he, the white Southerner, is to have any peace, is not to be faced with another legal process or maneuver every year, year after year, for the rest of his life."

FAULKNER, writing in the current issue of Life magazine, says he is against compulsory integration from principle and because he doesn't believe compulsion will work.

He describes his views on integration as being those of "a comparative handful" of Southerners who are "present yet detached, committed and attained neither by Citizens' Council nor NAACP."

He says those holding this "middle" position will be trampled by "any incipient irrevocability" on integration and forced to abandon their position "where we could have worked to help the Negro improve his condition."

FAULKNER WRITES in his "Letter to the North" that the Southern moderates were drawn to the Negro's side by the simple human instinct to champion the underdog," but that this "underdog" status will disappear if forced integration advocates persist. At that point, Faulkner says, his group would "have to make a new choice" and side with "that embattled white minority who are our blood and kin."

Faulkner likens this choice to that of many Southerners, including Robert E. Lee, in 1860 who chose civil war rather than accept alteration of racial condition by mere force of law or economic threat.

He states that the Northerner has failed to recognize this lesson of the Civil War and that he still does not know the South.

"He can't know it from his distance. He assumes that he is dealing with a simple legal theory and a moral idea. He is not. He is dealing with a fact: the fact of an emotional condition of such fierce unanimity as to scorn the fact that it is a minority and which will go to any length and against any odds at this moment to justify and, if necessary, defend that condition and its right to it."

FAULKNER BELIEVES SOUTH WOULD FIGHT

Times 2-17

William Faulkner, the 1949 Nobel Prize novelist, believes that the South "is armed for revolt."

The author, a native and resident of Mississippi, made this declaration in a copyrighted interview in The Reporter, a fortnightly magazine, published today. Thurs. 3-15-56

Mr. Faulkner asserted also that if it came to a choice he would "fight for Mississippi against the United States even if it meant going out into the streets and shooting Negroes."

Mr. Faulkner made it clear that he believed the South was wrong and the Negroes right on segregation. "But if there's no middle ground," he said, "if people like me we have got to chose, then I'm on the side of Mississippi." Thurs, 3-15-56

He asserted that white Southerners "will accept another Civil War knowing they're going to lose." Mon Mor.

He told the interviewer that he wished now "the liberals would stop—they should let us sweat in our own fears for a little while.

Mr. Faulkner said the thing to do was to make the Southerner feel that "when he reforms" ne would be doing it spontaneously and generously. "Give him time," he said.

William Faulkner's Letter To The North

Advertiser 9-4-4

WILLIAM FAULKNER, the famous Mississippi novelist, is nothing if not forthright. Last November, Faulkner told a racially mixed audience in Memphis:

Montgomery Ala.

It is the white man's shame that in our present Southern economy, the Negro must not have economic equality. It is to our double shame that giving him more social equality will jeopardize his present economic status; our triple shame that even then to justify ourselves, we must becloud the issue with the purity of white blood. Sat. 3-3-56

Faulkner's position is then clear: he is on record as opposing compulsory segregation. In a letter to the North in the current Life, however, Faulkner now takes a second look: "I was against compulsory segregation. I am just as strongly against compulsory integration . . . I don't believe compulsion will work."

And he warns the North that the pressures against the South now are forcing moderates like himself to abandon the midground and move to one trench or the other. But, he asks, now where will we go, if that middle becomes untenable? If we have to vacate it in order to keep from being trampled. Apart from the legal aspect, apart even from the simple incontrovertible immorality of discrimination by race, there was another simply human quantity which drew us to the Negro's side: the simple human instinct to champion the underdog.

. . . If we, the handful of [Southern moderates] are compelled by the simple threat of being trampled if we don't get out of the way, to vacate that middle where we could have worked to help the Negro improve his condition—compelled to move for the reason that no middle any longer exists—we will have to make a new choice. And this time the underdog will not be the Negro, since he, the Negro, will now be a segment of the topdog . . . The underdog will be that white embattled minority who are our blood and kin.

These non-Southern forces will now say, "Go then. We don't want you because we won't need you again." My reply to that is, "Are you sure you won't?"

FAULKNER cannot be accused of being a latter-day Confederate. Yet he says that the North has never really learned what the Civil War proved. And because it hasn't, it doesn't understand the force of Southern opposition today.

He [the Northerner] assumes [the Civil War] merely proved to the Southerner that he was wrong. It didn't do that because the Southerner already knew he was wrong and accepted that gambit even when he knew it was a fatal one. What the war should have done, but failed to do, was to prove to the North that the South will go to any length, even that fatal and doomed one, before it will accept alteration of its racial condition by mere force of law or economic threat.

HERE is a man whom yankees have honored with their highest literary awards, who has been reviled by his own people for his masterful documentation of the South's guilt. Yet he is scornful of Northern ignorance:

. . . The Northerner, the liberal, does not know the South. He can't know it from his distance. He assumes that he is dealing with a simple legal theory and a simple moral idea. He is not. He is dealing with a fact: the fact of an emotional condition of such fierce unanimity as to scorn the fact that it is a minority and which will go to any length and against any odds at this moment to justify and, if necessary, defend that condition and its right to it.

HIS advice to organizations and groups which would force integration on the South:

MISS ZORA NEALE HURSTON, NEGRO NOVELIST AND PLAYWRIGHT

'The Court Ruling Insults My Race'

Advertiser

[Zora Neale Hurston is a Negro novelist and playwright, a Barnard graduate and holder of Rosenwald and Guggenheim Fellowships.—ED.]

Adv. 1-27-56

I PROMISED God and some other responsible characters, including a bench of bishops, that I was not going to part my lips concerning the United States Supreme Court decision on ending segregation in the public schools of the South. But since a lot of time has passed and no one seems to touch on what appears to be the most important point in the hassle, I break my silence just this once. Consider me as just thinking out loud.

The whole matter revolves around the self-respect of my people. How much satisfaction can I get from a court order for somebody to associate with me who does not wish me near them? P. 4-A

The American Indian has never been spoken of as a minority and chiefly because there is no whine in the Indian. Certainly he fought, and valiantly, for his lands, and rightly so, but it is inconceivable of an Indian to seek forcible association with anyone. His well-known pride and self-respect would save him from that. I take the Indian position.

Clamor for Rights

Now a great clamor will arise in certain quarters that I deny the Negro children of the South their rights, and therefore I am one of those "handkerchief-head niggers" who bow low before the white man and tell out my own people, out of cowardice. However, an analytical glance will show that is not the case.

Ala.

If there are not adequate Negro schools and there are some residual, some inherent and unchangeable qualities in white schools, impossible to duplicate anywhere else, then I am the first to insist that Negro children of Florida be allowed to share this boon. But if there are adequate Negro schools and prepared instructors and instructions, then there is nothing different except the presence of white people.

For this reason, I regard the ruling of the Supreme Court as insulting, rather than honoring, my race. Since the days of the never-to-be-sufficiently-deplored Reconstruction, there has been current the belief that there is no greater delight to Negroes than physical association with whites, the doctrine of the white mare.

The Habits of Mules

Those familiar with the habits of mules are aware that any mule, if not restrained, automatically follows a white mare.

Lead a white mare along a country road and slyly open the gate and the mules in the lot would run out and follow this mare. This ruling being conceived and brought forth in sly political medium with eyes on 1956, and brought forth in the same spirit and for the same purpose, it is clear then they have taken the old notion to heart and acted on it. It is a cunning opening of the barnyard gate with the white mare ambling past. We are expected to hasten pell-mell after her.

It is most astonishing that this should be tried just when the nation is exerting itself to shake off the evils of communist penetration. It is to be recalled that Moscow, being made aware of this folk belief, made it the main plank in their campaign to win the American Negro from the 1920s on.

It was the come-on stuff. Join the party and get yourself a white wife or husband. To supply the expected demand, the party had scraped up this and that off of park benches and skid rows and held them in stock for us. The biggest types of Negroes were held to be just panting to get hold of one of these objects. Seeing how flat that program fell, it is astonishing that it would be so soon revived. Politics indeed makes strange bedfellows.

The South had better beware in another direction. While it is being frantic over the segregation ruling, it had better keep its eyes open for more important things. One instance of government by fiat has been rammed down its throat.

It is possible that the end of segregation is not here and never meant to be here at present, but the attention of the South is directed on what was calculated to keep us busy while more ominous things were brought to pass. The stubborn South and the Mid-west kept this nation from being dragged farther to the left than it was during the New Deal.

But what if it is contemplated to do away with the two-party system and arrive at government by administrative decree? No questions allowed and no information given out from the administrative department? We could get more rulings on the same subject and more far-reaching any day. It pays to weigh every saying and action, however trivial, as indicating a trend.

In the ruling on segregation, the unsuspecting nation might have witnessed a trial balloon. A relatively safe one, since it is sectional and on a matter not likely to arouse other sections of the nation to the support of the South. If it goes off fairly well, a precedent has been established. Government by fiat can replace the Constitution. You don't have to credit me with too much intelligence and penetration, just so you watch carefully and think.

No Elation From White Mare

Meanwhile, personally, I am not delighted. I am not persuaded and elevated by the white mare technique.

It is well known that I have no sympathy or respect for the "tragedy of color" school of thought among us, whose fountainhead is the pressure group concerned in this court ruling. I can see no tragedy in being too dark to be invited to the White House.

The Supreme Court would have pleased me more if they had concerned themselves about enforcing the compulsory education provisions for Negroes in the South as is done for white children. The next 10 years would be better spent in appointing truant officers and looking after conditions in the homes from which the children come. Use to the limit what we already have.

"Them's my sentiments," and I am sticking to them. Growth from within. Ethical and cultural desegregation. It is a contraditiction in terms to scream race pride and equality while at the same time spurning Negro teachers and self-association. That old white mare business can go racking on down the road for all I care.

An Unfair Charge

Call P. 1 8

We agree with many of the recommendations and suggestions made by the Mayor's Commission on Municipal Services. Most of them are sound, logical and practical. But we must take vigorous exception to the reports of two of the Commission's sub-committees. One deals with the Commission on Human Relations and the other with the Community Service division of the Welfare department.

Kansas City, Mo.

The sub-committee which "investigated" the work of the Human Relations Commission either made a very superficial study of it or it has little or no understanding of the commission's purpose and function.

38a 1956

The sub-committee report charges the Human Relations commission with "promoting" the interests of one group of citizens instead of acting as an arbitrator of differences between groups.

Star 2-3-56

As an example of its serving as an "advocate" for a particular group, the report says:

> "The recommendation of the Employment Committee of the Commission that a clause relating to employment practices be included in the franchise to be granted the Kansas City Public Service company is cited as a specific instance where the Commisison has exceeded the scope of its function as set out in the ordinance under which it was created."

The ordinance (No. 15091) passed on Nov. 20, 1951, states the following as the purpose of the Human Relations Commission:

> "The purpose of the Commission shall be to promote, foster, encourage and stimulate sympathetic understanding, harmonious relationships, a spirit of charity and a program of practical cooperation among all groups and individuals TO THE END THAT KANSAS CITY MAY GROW AND ADVANCE IN PEACE AND WHOLESOME COLLECTIVE ACHIEVEMENT IN THE FIELD OF INDIVIDUAL OPPORTUNITY."

The ordinance further gives the Commission authority to:

> (1) Devise and recommend to the Mayor and the Council ways and means of discouraging and combatting prejudice, intolerance and bigotry in all groups and in their relations with one another."
>
> (2) Discover all practices and policies calculated to create conflicts and tensions and recommend ways and means for their elimination.
> (3) Report and recommend means of eliminating any unfair or unjust discrimination against any person or group which would be deemed detrimental to the best interest of the community.

Under this statement of purpose, the Human Relation Commission's employment committee was clearly within its province to make the recommendation which is so severely criticized by the Municipal Services commission.

What was that recommendation? Simply stated, the committtee recommended that the city council include in its new franchise with the Kansas City Public Service company a clause stipulating that persons should be employed by the company strictly on a basis of merit and qualification, without regard to race, creed or color

Such a clause would open the way for the employment of Negroes as street car and bus operators in Kansas City — a step that long since has been taken and has proved successful in cities including our own St. Louis.

In asking that all qualified persons be hired as bus drivers on public vehicles, the Human Relations Commission is working in the interest of Kansas City as a whole, not for any particular group. In ruling that segregation against the Negro school pupil is unconstitutional, the Supreme Court was not an "advocate" for the Negro race but was pronouncing a principle upon which this country was founded — that of equal treatment and fair play to all, regardless of race, creed or color.

In recommending non-discriminatory policies, the Human Relations Commission is trying to help Kansas City as a whole. This unit of the city government is not an "advocate" of the Negro people of Kansas City. It does advocate, however, — and rightly so — that all citizens be given the same treatment at the hands of the city government.

It does not sit idly by, as the Municipal Services Commission evidently would have it do, and wait until trouble occurs between groups and then rush in like a Johnny-Come-Lately to serve as an "arbitrator." An "arbitrator" comes in after war has started. The Human Relations Commission, like other agencies of its kind, tries to prevent "war" between groups.

It so happens that in Kansas City, the Negro is the largest minority group within our population. Quite naturally, the Commission's work deals for the most part with Negro-white relationships.

If the Negro people of Kansas City should start some organized resistance to the employment policies of the Kansas City Public Service company — as the Negroes of Montgomery, Ala., have done against the jim crow bus system of that town — then, and not until then, we suppose, would the Municipal Services Commission have the Human Relations Commission "step in" and try to pacify Negroes and plead with them to "be patient."

The Municipal Services Commission is "off the beam" in its report on the Human Relations Commission.

It is also sadly off the track in its recommendation that the Community Service division of the Welfare Department be reduced in staff by 50 per cent and that the "programs of the division be tailored accordingly."

The Municipal Service Commission may not know it, but the Community Service division is the closest link that the city government has with the people — the ordinary, average citizens — who live in the town. Other cities throughout the country are setting up similar divisions patterned after the Kansas City plan. To cut the program of this division in half would be a tragic error on the part of our city government.

Before action is taken on the report of the Services Commission, we hope that Mayor Bartle will study the recommendations personally and care[illegible] and will weigh them in the light of the point[illegible] which we have presented here.

NAACP Head Refused Service At Courthouse

Star. 4-13-56

Kansas City, Mo.

ST. JOSEPH. — Mrs. Rufus P. Beshears, president of the St. Joseph branch of the NAACP, has filed a complaint with the county court charging that she was refused service at the lunch stand in the courthouse Tuesday, April 3.

Mrs. Beshears, whose husband is a dentist here, was at the courthouse as a witness in the Edna Turner murder trial. She said that she had been served at the lunch stand Monday but that when she returned for lunch Tuesday with a white friend, she was denied service because of her color.

"Yesterday I entered the lunchroom with a friend, a white woman," Mrs. Beshears said. "We sat at a little table. Immediately, the woman behind the counter came over and told me Mr. Smart, who operates the lunch stand, said that I couldn't be served. I was startled. She ignored me when I tried to beckon her back to the table. The only answer she finally gave to my question was to tell me to ask Mr. Smart why I couldn't be served. I asked her if she would serve my friend. She said 'Yes.' We then left."

The courthouse lunch stand is operated by Howard Smart and his wife.

Kansas City, Mo.

Smart told a reporter later that he didn't have anything to sell Mrs. Beshears.

Mrs. Beshears and a committee from the NAACP went before Presiding Judge John Madget and District Judge Don Gilpin to lodge a protest. The judges said that they would look into the matter.

Other NAACP members who went with Mrs. Beshears to see the judges were the Rev. Herbert Bletson, Mrs. A. A. Robinson, Marcus Murchison and Mrs. Emaline Hortona.

Mrs. Beshears said that a courthouse is for all the people and added that Missouri has no segregation law.

When Mrs. Beshears was served at the lunch stand Monday, she said that Mr. and Mrs. Smart thought she was a Latin.

White and Negro Boys Battle at KC Ball Park

Constitution
Wed. 4-25-56
Atlanta, Ga.

KANSAS CITY, April 24 (AP)—A series of fist fights and scuffles broke out between white and Negro high school students leaving Municipal Stadium after today's Detroit - Kansas City baseball game.

Press box observers estimated the number involved at about 300. They said the free-for-all pitted whites against Negroes.

A ball park official said the melee had just about "worn itself out" by the time traffic officers reached the scene. It lasted about 10 minutes. Police headquarters said it did not receive a call for assistance and that no arrests were made.

It could not be learned how the fights got started. More than 8,400 high school students attended the game, classes having been dismissed for the afternoon.

There were reports of several broken noses.

Race Fights Follow Tilt

Wed. 4-25-56

KANSAS CITY —(UP)— Scores of fist fights between Negro and white high school youths broke out Tuesday after the Kansas City-Detroit baseball game in Municipal Stadium.

At one time, police said, nearly 1,000 boys of both races were on the playing field "fighting, shoving and milling about."

All the players had left the field and most of the spectators were leaving the stadium when the disturbance started.

One Negro youth and a white boy began fighting, police said and within minutes scores of fights between white and Negro boys broke out on the field.

About 30 ushers rushed onto the field to stop the brawling. However, their efforts were in vain until the arrival of several policemen, who had been directing homeward bound traffic on streets surrounding the huge stadium.

Wrong Way To Integration

Call P. 18

In these days when a smooth transition into integration is the goal of all intelligent citizens of all races, creeds and nationalities, it is unfortunate to see ads such as these appear in the daily press:

Fri. 4-20-56 P. 18

COLORED IN YOUR BLOCK?
WANT TO SELL AND GET ALL CASH? FOR PROMPT APPRAISAL ESTIMATE CALL
BILL WILLIAMS, CH. 1-9663.
CHAS. F. CURRY, REALTORS.

WOMAN — COLORED: GOOD OLD SOUTHERN MAMMY, CLEAN, RELIABLE: CHRISTIAN HOME AND WAGES: SNAP FOR RIGHT PARTY.

Kansas City, Mo.

Allowing the term "southern mammy" to appear in the advertising columns of a modern newspaper is inexcusable both on the part of the advertiser and of the newspaper itself. The pre-Civil War term has no place in today's world. The term, which goes back to the days of slavery, has an unpleasant connotation. Its use can only stir up feelings of ill will and distrust among groups at a time when they are trying hard to come closer together.

If the person who placed the ad really thought that he could locate a "mammy" in this day and age, the newspaper ad taker should have informed him that he was wasting his money. No self-respecting Negro woman, no matter how badly she might need a job, would answer such an ad as this.

The second ad, it seems to us, calls for a serious investigation by the real estate board into the practices of certain real estate men in the so-called "fringe" areas in which Negro families are purchasing homes. When real estate men, such as the one who placed this ad, encourage white families to flee when a Negro moves in, they are fostering a continuation of segregated neighborhoods and are spreading the ghetto.

It has been suspected all along that the exodus of white families from neighborhoods into which one or two Negro families move was inspired by real estate dealers with their eyes on commissions. This ad furnishes the proof.

We daresay that if it were not for the encouragement, and in some cases, we suspect, insistence, of real estate men, many, many a white family would not consider moving away from its established neighborhood.

The Real Estate Board should not permit such "scare" advertisements as placed in the press by the Curry realtors. In keeping with the spirit of integration, newspapers themselves should discontinue the use of the racial tags "white" and "colored" in real estate and all other ads. So long as we continue to distinguish between "white" and "colored" citizens, we postpone the day when integration will become a reality and democracy a living way of life.

Four Negroes Fired For Allowing White Student In Pool

Call P. 2
Kansas City, Mo.
Fri. 7-13-56

JEFFERSON CITY, Mo. — Five students of Lincoln university have placed the Jefferson City Park board on the spot as a result of action by the supervisor of the community swimming pool last week. A white student purchased a ticket at the swimming pool from another Lincoln student who was in the office.

The white student, Gene Williams, stated that his purpose was to take a shower but he dived into the pool. The supervisor, Leland G. Smith, former principal of Washington elementary school, learned of the incident upon his return and discharged the two young men who were on duty at the time.

Earl Wilson, a Lincoln senior, was charged with selling the ticket and Earl Taylor, a life guard, was charged as his accomplice. Both were discharged. When the matter was brought to the attention of the Commissioner of Parks and Playgrounds, Ben Porter, Williams was also fired. He had been employed during the summer as supervisor of the Community Center playground.

When Donald Webb and Max Culmore, also employed as workers at the swimming pool sided with the three discharged employees, they were fired, but later rehired. Later they resigned, causing the swimming pool to be temporarily closed from lack of life guards.

The students asked for and received a hearing July 6 before the Park Board, and with the mayor of Jefferson City, Arthur Ellis. They are demanding that the city's two swimming pools be opened to all on an integrated basis.

Previously the local branch of the NAACP had demanded that both pools be opened to all, but the board refused to take this step, stating that they would not change present policy without a court order, or one from higher up.

Interestingly enough, when a Negro was sold a ticket to the all white swimming pool, during the supervisor's absence, the person who sold him the ticket was not fired at all.

38a 1956 MISSOURI (TROOP TRAIN)

Military Police Quell Fights On White, Negro Troop Train

Journal Const. 6-2-56 P.1

Atlanta Ga.

CROCKER, Mo., June 2 (AP). City Marshal Clyde Frey said a troop train was halted here Friday night after it was reported that fighting had broken out between white and Negro troops on board.

Frey said military police from nearby Ft. Leonard Wood met the train and restored order. He said 400 soldiers aboard were removed and separated.

Seats on the train were ripped up and cushions were torn during the fighting, Frey reported.

* * *

THE PUBLIC information officer at Ft. Leonard Wood, Col. Fred May, said order apparently was restored after an Air Force officer was sent to Crocker. He said the train carried five carloads of Air Force trainees bound for Lackland Air Force Base, San Antonio, Tex., and was due there this afternoon.

Col. May said Lt. Durwaid W. Caudill, with an Air Force detachment at Ft. Leonard Wood, was sent in a military police car after the fort received word of a disturbance aboard the Frisco Railroad train.

The public information officer said he did not know the cause of the trouble, and that apparently no one was seriously hurt.

May said he knew nothing of reported damage to train seats or cushions.

MARSHAL FREY said "there was some kind of racial dispute. I don't think anyone was hurt. Trainmen reported some of the men had weapons and that some were drawn.

"It seemed to me that a little liquor was involved. Perhaps it was more that than anything else. And some of the boys probably were away from home for the first time."

A call for military police help, Frey said, was made when the train reached Newburg, in south central Missouri. When the train stopped in Crocker it was unloaded and the men were separated into small groups. The train stopped in Crocker for an hour and a half.

Frey said trainmen told him there were several fist fights and other skirmishes before the Crocker stop.

Frey was unable to estimate the number of Negroes aboard.

Hundreds Sign Negro Manifesto

Answer to Law-Makers Who Defy Supreme Court

Courier 4-7-56

A biting answer to 100 signers of a Southern "manifesto" which openly defies the U. S. Supreme Court's decision on integration has been provided by the endorsers of a "Negro Manifesto."

The "Negro Manifesto" is in essence a pledge guaranteeing the upholding of the second section in the 14th Amendment to the U. S. Constitution. It has received the backing of prominent citizens from coast to coast.

Basically, the document subscribes to the use of all legal methods possible to combat the political mouthpieces of white supremacy; namely, those 100 congressional representatives from Dixie who signed the anti-integration "manifesto."

Typical of the reaction to the "Negro Manifesto" (printed on this page) are the following comments:

BOOKER T. ALEXANDER, Imperial Potentate of the Ancient and Egyptian Arabic Order of the Nobles of the Mystic Shrine (Prince Hall Affiliation):

"I find myself in complete agreement with the manifesto advanced by the Pittsburgh Courier. To take any other position would not be consistent with the Constitution of the United States and the laws of our land. The Southern manifesto strikes at the pillars of American democracy and the eyes of the free world cannot escape the collective danger in that irresponsible and outrageous document."

DR. W. J. FITZPATRICK, Sovereign Grand Commander of the National Supreme Council of the Ancient and Accepted Scottish Rite Masons:

"I am always happy to be counted among those who love and endeavor to uphold the Constitution of the United States against all enemies, whomsoever. In my opinion implementation of section two of the 14th Amendment to the Constitution is one of the surest ways to guarantee liberty and justice for all. It is in the light of these convictions that I give my endorsement to the manifesto prestnted by the Pittsburgh Courier."

Mr. Alexander

Dr. Fitzpatrick

REV. LEON H. SULLIVAN, pastor of Zion Baptist Church, Philadelphia, and named one of "Ten outstanding men of America" by the National Junior Chamber of Commerce:

"The Courier's demand that section two of the 14th Amendment be implemented is something which has my complete support. It is high time that the members of Congress took stock of their members and refused to seat those whose moral character is suspect."

Rev. Sullivan

R. P. Alexander

RAYMOND PACE ALEXANDER, member of City Council, Philadelphia:

"I wholeheartedly concur with the Courier's pledge to see that congressional representation is apportioned according to eligible voters instead of total population. Congress must declare that any disenfranchisement of eligible voters by fraud, oppression, and threats of violence, such as is taking place in the Southern states, would be cause to deny such elected representatives their seats. Thus, two possible situations would arise. In a state such as Mississippi, with six members of the House elected on the basis of total adult population but elected by only 50 per cent of the eligible votes, the representation would be cut to three. Or if no oppression or threats of violence existed, and all citizens of that state, including the Negro, were given the right to vote the benefits to our people would prove immeasurable."

MRS. HELEN BOYD HOWARD (wife of Dr. T. R. M. Howard, formerly of Mound Bayou, Miss. and now living in Los Angeles):

"I believe that the Courier's idea of pointing out to the nation the Second Section of the 14th Amendment is important. At present, Mississippi's representation in Congress is based on its total adult population . . . and since hundreds of Negroes are denied the right . . . I believe with my husband that the State's representation in Congress should be reduced unless Negroes are given their justly due rights to the ballot."

Mrs. Howard

Dr. George

DR. ZELMA WATSON GEORGE of Cleveland, Ohio:

"Several millions of people, white and black, 21 years of age or more, possessed of sound mind and free from any criminal records, citizens of the United States and of the particular states wherein they reside, and therefore qualified voters . . . have been denied the ballot . . . its responsibilities and its advantages. This disfranchisement has converted a numerical white minority into a majority which has sent to Congress many representatives and has left millions of Negroes either unrepresented or misrepresented."

The Negro Manifesto

Courier 4-4 38a

THREE WEEKS AGO, 100 Southern Senators and Representatives signed and issued a Manifesto which, in essence, defied the Supreme Court and in which they pledged themselves to use all legal means to avoid compliance with the Segregation Decision. They averred that they were basing their obstinacy on the Federal Constitution which, they allege, they love.

We Negroes also love the Constitution—all of it. We pledge ourselves to work to uphold the laws and constitutions of ALL the forty-eight states, insofar as they do not violate the Federal Constitution, and to stand staunchly behind the Federal Constitution and the laws of the United States.

Pittsburgh Pa.

While Southern Senators are concerned about the Supreme Court and the Segregation Decision, we confess to great uneasiness about the Second Section of the Fourteenth Amendment to the Constitution — about which there has been no DECISION and no ACTION. This section is entitled: Apportionment of Representatives in Congress. It reads:

Sat. 4-7-56

"2. Representatives shall be apportioned among the several states according to their respective numbers, counting the WHOLE NUMBER of persons in each state excluding Indians not taxed. But when the right to vote at any election for the choice of electors for President and Vice President of the United States, Representatives in Congress, the executive and judicial officers of a state, or the members of the Legislature thereof, is denied to any of the male inhabitants of such state, being 21 years of age, and citizens of the United States, or in any way abridged, except for participation in rebellion, or other crime, the BASIS FOR REPRESENTATION THEREIN SHALL BE REDUCED IN THE PROPORTION WHICH THE NUMBER OF SUCH MALE CITIZENS SHALL BEAR TO THE WHOLE NUMBER OF MALE CITIZENS 21 YEARS OF AGE IN SUCH STATE."

We pledge ourselves to use all legal means to see that this section of the Constitution (the whole of which we love) is implemented and that there shall be no longer prevail an iniquitous situation in which hundreds of thousands of American citizens are denied the right to vote, or have their right abridged, in many states below the Mason and Dixon line. We pledge ourselves to use all the legal and moral power we have to oust members of Congress who sit there illegally because other citizens are denied the right to vote. This is OUR Manifesto.

Issues Order In Bias Case

Chicago, Ill.

OMAHA 2 (INS) — District Judge James M. Patton has signed a show cause order against the Omaha city prosecutor and the acting city attorney in connection with a discrimination complaint filed by a Chicago Negro.

The case involves refusal of the Omaha American Legion Club to rent a room to Alexander H. Gordon, last June when Gordon came to Omaha to attend the general council of Congregational Churches.

Sat 9-15-56

Gordon filed a discrimination complaint after the incident, but city prosecutor Charles A. Fryzek refused to prosecute, contending that the Legion club was a private club.

Attorneys for Gordon contend, however, that the legion club is licensed under Nebraska's Public Hotel Law and should be regarded as such.

Princeton Authority on the Constitution Asserts There Is 'Room for Discussion'

Sun. 3-18-56

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., March 17—Dr. Alpheus T. Mason, Professor of Jurisprudence at Princeton University and an authority on constitutional interpretation, has praised the Southern manifesto presented in both houses of Congress Monday.

New York, N.Y.

The statement signed by nineteen Senators and eighty-one Representatives pledged support for moves to counteract by "all lawful means" the integration decisions made by the Supreme Court. Professor Mason called the manifesto "a good thing." He added:

"At the very least it is calculated to give the court and the country pause."

Professor Mason expressed the opinion that "the people are entitled to know that the issue isn't black and white—there is much room for argument and discussion here. This statement is something that needed to be made, and it has been made in a dignified and effective way, I feel."

The author of a number of books on law and the Constitution, Dr. Mason has since 1947 held the McCormick Professorship of Jurisprudence at Princeton. The McCormick professorship was first held by Woodrow Wilson from 1898 to 1910.

Dr. Mason was graduated from Dickinson College in Carlisle, Pa., and did his graduate work at Princeton. He was born in Snow Hill, Md., 18 miles below Salisbury, in the southeastern part of the state, on Sept. 18, 1899.

Mason Cites Two Points

Professor Mason pointed out that the manifesto "attacks the Supreme Court at the point where it is most vulnerable." He cited two points wherein the court's recent decisions concerning segregation in public schools might be considered unwarranted:

"First, rather than rely on available judicial precedents, the court invoked two of the flimsiest of all our disciplines—sociology and psychology—as the basis of its decision.

"Secondly, the court in connection with the matter of implementing the decision, suggested the formula of 'deliberate speed.' Hindsight indicates that the court itself might better have followed that very formula and thus avoided the precipitation of a very explosive issue."

Because of these two points, Professor Mason said he felt the integration decisions could have been much more firmly founded.

Racial slurs cost Jersey judge's job

Afro-American P. 5 Sat, 1-28-56 Baltimore, Md.

NEWARK N. J. — A Superior Court judge who recently made uncomplimentary remarks about Puerto Ricans has been removed for "intemperance in his judicial conduct."

Gov. Robert B. Meyner, in a drastic move, unseated Judge Frank T. Lloyd Jr. who made the alleged slurring remarks at hearing before the Monmouth County grand jury. According to Meyner, Judge Lloyd said:

* * *

"WE LOOK at slums and I have always felt that slums were the result of people. Unfortunately, there are certain classes of people — particularly those imported from Puerto Rico — one of the filthiest places I have ever been.

"The people live in hovels and they live together exactly in the same state as you have mentioned here. In some cases it is even worse. They have never been educated differently."

* * *

GOVERNOR MEYNER asserted that Judge Lloyd had been sitting on the bench illegally since September and added that it is now up to the courts to decide the validity of each of the decisions he has handed down.

Judge Lloyd, who had served on the old Circuit Court, was elevated to the Superior Court bench by former Gov. Alfred E. Driscoll Sept. 15, 1948. He was assigned to Camden and Monmouth Counties.

The ousted jurist was presiding at a trial in Freehold at 2:30 p.m. Tuesday when Governor Meyner ordered his name stricken from the state payroll. He drew a $20,000-a-year salary but is not entitled to a pension.

* * *

IN HIS removal order, Governor Meyner cited a taxpayers petition to Judge Lloyd requesting an investigation of municipal affairs in Delaware Township, his handling of which was criticized sharply by the chief justice of the State Supreme Court.

In describing Judge Lloyd's handling of that petition, Chief Justice Arthur T. Vanderbilt said: "The proceedings here followed partook of the nature of an inquisition and had the natural tendency to intimidate citizens and seriously hamper the good intended by these statutory proceedings."

* * *

THE GOVERNOR denounced the remarks and said that Puerto Ricans are "American citizens and have as much right to be in California or New Jersey as in Puerto Rico."

Racial Count Holds Tavern Operator

Filipino Star Washington, D.C. 8-18-56

MIDDLETOWN, N. J., Aug. 10 (AP).—Mrs. Eva Barkei, a white woman who operates a tavern, is free on $500 bail on a discrimination charge for allegedly ordering a Negro woman to leave her establishment.

Magistrate W. Gilbert Manson Wednesday held Mrs. Barkei for action by the grand jury on a charge brought by Mrs. Edith Marshall of Belleville.

P. 6-A

The Negro woman testified Mrs. Barkei ordered her out of Herman's Bar & Grill on Rt. 35 on June 30 after she had taken her two children into the travern to use the restroom.

Mrs. Marshall said that at the time she was with a party on a chartered bus en route to the Veterans of Foreign Wars encampment in Asbury Park.

Mrs. Barkei, who with her husband, Herman, operates the tavern, was found not guilty of a charge of assault brought by another Negro woman, Mrs. Sarah Claiborne, of Bloomfield.

Mrs. Claiborne, also a passenger in the bus, contended Mrs. Barkei pushed her.

Skate club stops bias by consent

Afro-American Sat, 12-15-56 Baltimore, Md.

TRENTON, N.J. — Nicholas Mekosh, owner of the Skateland Skating Club in Camden agreed last week to discontinue the practice of limiting use of the club to whites only. P. 6

A hearing on the complaint of E. James Tolliver of Camden, scheduled for Nov. 26 before the Division Against Discrimination, was cancelled.

Prior to the hearing, Mekosh agreed to and signed a Consent Order issued by Dr. Frederick M. Raubinger, commissioner of education.

* * *

TOLLIVER had charged that he was refused admittance to the Skating Club through the old dodge of a membership card requirement.

Dr. John P. Milligan, assistant commissioner of education in charge of the DAD, said Mekosh did not deny that he barred colored patrons.

He argued that he had a right to do so because the skating club was operated on the private membership basis.

On the advice of his counsel, the club owner waived the public hearing and signed the Consent Order, which directs him "to cease and desist" from his discriminatory practices.

Pittsburgh Pa. P. 2

NEW YORK CITY—A young Negro concert pianist recently returned from a State Department-sponsored tour of Europe and the Middle East, playing and lecturing on American democracy, charged discrimination against a Park Ave. apartment house.

Robert Pritchard, with a friend, Regis Benoit, who is white, said they decided to rent the $165-a-month unit at 926 Park Ave., as co-tenants last summer prior to Pritchard's leaving on a tour.

Pritchard said he paid a deposit on the apartment, accepted door-keys, signed a lease and obtained telephone and utility service.

Pritchard said when he went to the Pat Palmer Rental Agency to sign his part of the lease, Miss Palmer turned pale. He said Miss Palmer told him he could not play his piano in the apartment (to which he said he agreed) and told him he needed a regular checking account instead of a special one.

Finally, he said she agreed to let him sign the lease. Afterwards, he said he found the lock had been changed on the apartment when he tried to send more furniture there.

Churchman Hits City's Segregation

Herald Tribune

Calls It Worse Than in South

P. 10

The Rev. Leland B. Henry, executive director of the Department of Christian Social Relations of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of New York, said yesterday that "there is more rigid segregation in New York than in many a Southern city."

In dealing with the situation, he said, the city has made "scarcely a dent" in removing discrimination from private housing. "And this results not only in appalling overcrowding in the homes, but in a de facto segregation in the schools," he added, referring to recent studies which show that in some neighborhoods Negroes account for 90 per cent or more of school enrollments.

Installation at St. John's

Mr. Henry spoke at the installation of the Rev. John W. Turnbull as canon precentor of the Cathedral of St. John the Divine.

He pointed to a correlation between bad housing and juvenile delinquency and stressed that youth crimes are increasing in number and seriousness. New York, he said, "is a great city in the complexity of its problems. It is a great city in the organized good will of its people." But nevertheless, Mr. Henry said, "Gang warfare . . . has become a normal way of life for thousands of boys and girls."

Bishop Donegan Installs

Mr. Turnbull will come into contact with these problems in his new position. As canon precentor he will take part in the cathedral's civic and community activities as well as maintain liaison with the St. John's "Friends" organization, an international group interested in the cathedral.

The new canon is a graduate of Yale Divinity School and received the Master of Sacred Theology degree from Virginia Theological Seminary this year. He has been a study secretary for the World Council of Churches at its offices in Geneva, Switzerland.

Mr. Turnbull was presented for installation at the Evensong services in St. John's by the Very Rev. James A. Pike, dean of the cathedral. He was installed by the Right Rev. Horace W. B. Donegan, Bishop of New York.

FIGHT ON BIAS URGED ON A 'LOCAL' LEVEL

Herald Tribune 10-31-56

New York

Acceptance of minority groups exists throughout the city, but the goodwill must be channeled, a group of community leaders was told yesterday.

John K. Stearns, educational field representative of the New York State Commission Against Discrimination, addressed a committee of the National Conference of Christians and Jews pondering the problem of "transition neighborhoods."

In many cases, Mr. Stearns said, resistance to newcomers is not the problem. He declared that goodwill existed on both sides, but that there was a good deal of perplexity about how to go about making friends.

George K. Hunton, executive secretary of the Catholic Interracial Council, urged understanding at the neighborhood level.

Joseph Monserrat, director of the New York office of the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, declared that the core of all standard metropolitan areas was gradually becoming non-white, with the white population moving to surrounding areas.

The panel session was held at the Building for Brotherhood, 42 West Fifty-seventh Street.

Amazing Church Misinformation

Courier P. 9

Pittsburgh, Pa.

An amazing disservice to the cause of equal rights was done recently by, of all people, the Rev. Leland B. Henry, executive director of the Department of Christian Social Relations of the New York Protestant Diocese, who told a Cathedral audience that "there is more rigid segregation in New York than in many a Southern city."

This erroneous statement hit every daily newspaper in the nation, especially in the South, although a complete falsehood.

Sat. 11-10-56

There are more than 30 laws in New York State not only barring discrimination because of color or creed in all places of public accommodation and entertainment, in public housing, in schools and colleges, in transportation, in employment (by unions, employers and agencies), etc., but also providing stiff penalties.

Not only was New York the first state to pass an FEP law but its State Commission Against Discrimination can even initiate cases without charges being made by an aggrieved party.

It is astonishing that a high Protestant Episcopal official living in New York City is ignorant on this score, and shows how much more education is necessary.

Funds Needed to Fight Discrimination

Herald Tribune P.8

TO the N. Y. Herald Tribune:

The Legislature just adjourned has notable achievements to its credit. Among them is the completion of a comprehensive body of law granting to the State Commission Against Discrimination (SCAD) authority to prohibit discrimination in the rental or sale of all types of government-assisted housing.

During the closing days of the legislative session a good deal of heated discussion was generated over Gov. Harriman's request that SCAD be granted additional funds for professional staff to implement its important new housing responsibility. Unhappily the discussions developed an ad hominem orientation. The clear need was obscured by a continuing exchange of political brickbats.

In addition to making an unwarranted personal attack upon SCAD's distinguished chairman, Commissioner Charles Abrams, Republican legislative leaders frequently expressed the view during debate that SCAD did not need the budget funds because there was no discrimination in New York State.

The facts are well known. Simply stated, there is discrimination in our state. Qualified workers and qualified tenants who are members of minority groups do suffer discriminatory treatment.

This is not to say that the situation is either hopeless or bad. It is neither. Progress in employment and housing has been steady and rapid.

It is to say that there is still a job to be done, that a gap still exists between our stated public policy and the realities of life in New York State, although the gap has been narrowing rapidly during the past decade.

New Yorkers can be proud of the high public policy which the Legislature has set in the field of non-discrimination in housing. The three Metcalf-Baker laws passed during the last two sessions of the Legislature comprise a body of civil rights legislation which places New York far in the forefront of efforts across our country to improve the condition of minority citizens.

Only a few years ago, our New York State laws prohibited discrimination only in public housing. No state agency was given responsibility for implementing the law. No enforcement machinery of any kind was provided. Each aggrieved individual was required to commence and finance his own legal action.

* * *

Today, SCAD is vested with supervision over non-discrimination legislation covering not only all public housing and limited-income housing, but also covering the vast range of government - assisted middle - income housing. Included are all slum clearance and redevelopment projects constructed under the much discussed provisions of Title I of the Housing Act of 1949, as well as all other rental and co-operative apartment projects built with Federal Housing Administration financing assistance since 1955, and finally, virtually all of the new single-family homes which will be built in the suburbs with F. H. A. or Veterans Administration assistance.

Simply stated, a large portion, if not a preponderance, of all new housing built in the future in New York State will be covered by non - discrimination legislation.

That this vast body of social engineering legislation was passed without a dissenting vote in either house of the Legislature in a few short years, was an example of legislative courage and leadership for which both parties may congratulate themselves.

How we choose to implement this new and pioneering fabric of laws is of the utmost importance. New Yorkers have never chosen extremism or emotionalism on either side as the path to progress in our race relations. New York State is a leader in the field of intergroup relations because we have had the patience and wisdom to employ the best available community-relations techniques in a calm, considered, and workmanlike fashion.

We will fail to meet the leadership challenge implicit in the law if SCAD's activities in supervising housing under its jurisdiction is confined to processing a tangled proliferation of verified complaints and adjudicating the resulting enforcement actions.

To the extent that SCAD, by means of a positive and constructive program, can encourage voluntary compliance with the terms of the law by studiously separating fact from emotion, by informal and off - the - record conferences with housing-project developers, by the give-and-take of joint study, analysis and persuasion, to that extent we will have met the true purposes of the law.

Such a positive program demands funds for a well-qualified professional staff. Surely our legislative leaders will rise to the level of civil-rights statesmanship of which on the record they are clearly capable, and provide SCAD with urgently needed funds at the next session of the New York State Legislature. The citizens of the state will, I believe, expect and urge such action.

Speaker Calls Him 'Zealot, Not Balanced' — Abrams Charges Cutting of Staff

Mon. 4-30-56 New York N.Y.

Speaker Oswald D. Heck of the State Assembly charged yesterday that Charles Abrams was "unfit" to head the State Commission Against Discrimination.

The Schenectady Republican, an influential leader of his party in the state, said of the chairman of the commission: "He's too much of a zealot; he isn't balanced in such a sensitive job."

Mr. Abrams, informed of Mr. Heck's charge, accused Republicans of "paying lip service" to sympathy for minorities while "whittling away" the commission's staff.

Mr. Heck made his charge in an interview on the televised Citizens Union "Searchlight" program over WRCA-TV. He also declared himself "an active candidate" for Governor in 1958. He said that, while Republican leaders had considered ending all state rent controls, he did not think "the time is quite ripe" for their removal.

Asked about Mr. Abrams' contention that the Legislature had hampered his agency's fight against racial and religious bias by cutting its budget, Mr. Heck said the Republican-controlled Legislature had "increased his appropriations to the tune of $12,000" this year. He also denied that the agency's personnel had been reduced.

He said that "what annoyed" Mr. Abrams was the Legislature's refusal to grant his request for authority to initiate action in discrimination cases. The commission now may act only on complaints.

"Why Mr. Abrams wants this [authority] I don't know," Mr. Heck went on. "Of course, he would like to build up his organization. But what incensed me against Mr. Abrams is this: I think first of all he's unfit personally to hold that kind of job."

As an example, he cited Mr. Abrams' fight for rent control last year while he was serving as State Rent Administrator. Mr. Heck said:

"When we didn't continue the rent laws in some of the upstate districts he made a real howl because he saw some of his patronage powers waning.

"He went through all the upstate cities and tried to arouse citizens' councils and organizations to try to put pressure on members of the Legislature to re-establish rent controls."

He said he "resented" an attempt to arouse "our people against their own representatives."

Asked if he favored the removal of Mr. Abrams by the Governor, Mr. Heck replied: "I wouldn't say that. I don't want to go * * *."

A chorus of question interrupted him and the sentence was not completed.

Informed of Mr. Heck's assertions, Mr. Abrams said the $12,000 increase in funds for his agency was only "a bookkeeping change." In a statement he said:

Representatives of 38 agencies in the field of race relations met today with officials of the State Commission Against Discrimination to survey the past year's gains and pinpoint 1957's objectives.

Meeting in the commission's city headquarters at 270 Broadway, the delegates to the annual SCAD conference — its first public one—cited public and private housing as "the most important area of concern" in next year's anti-discrimination battle.

New York N.Y.

According to a SCAD report, complaints of discrimination in housing (FHA and Veterans Administration - aided, as well as private) amounted to a fourth of the agency's total complaints since last July. "This area," the report said, "will constitute one of the commission's main burdens" during 1957.

P.11

The commission, gauging public support on an increased number of complaints, reported 495 complaints were received during the first ten months this year compared with only 229 complaints over the same period in 1948. During the 1948-56 period, SCAD said, the state's non-white population increased 200,000 and the Puerto Rican population rose by more than 550,000.

17 Groups Urge State Unit Fund

A demand for a 50 per cent increase in appropriations for the State Commission Against Discrimination was issued yesterday by a group of seventeen New York organizations following a two-hour conference at Freedom House, 20 W. 40th St.

The increase is needed, it was explained, to expand the work of the commission to cover transportation employees, with special attention to air lines, and to public-financed housing projects.

The group expressed concern over a legislative proposal to lop $38,000 from the commission's proposed 1956-'57 budget. It announced that efforts would be made to persuade legislative budgetary officials to restore the cut and to add a supplementary budget request of $186,000 —making a total increase of $224,000 to the 1955-'56 budget of $428,863. Gov. Harriman has proposed a budget of $486,245 for the commission next year.

'Attack on SCAD head incredible'

Afro-American Baltimore, Md. May 12 '56

NEW YORK — Charges by Speaker Oswald D. Heck of the New York State Assembly that Charles Abrams is "unfit" to head the State Commission Against Discrimination because "he's too much of a zealot," were called "incredible" by Roy Wilkins.

Mr. Heck's attack upon the SCAD chairman was made in a television interview on April 29. It followed rejection by the State Legislature of Mr. Abrams' request for enlarged authority and a bigger budget for investigations.

"In view of the demonstrable need for a more active campaign against racial and religious bigotry," Mr. Wilkins wrote Mr. Heck that "your charge is incredible."

HE CITED recent articles published in two leading New York dailies indicating "the extent of racial discrimination still to be found in New York City and State."

Wilkins expressed fear that Speaker Heck's remarks may "be used by avowed enemies of civil rights to slow down our state's steady progress toward equal rights for all citizens."

He asked that in a future legislature the assemblyman "reconsider your present position and vote to strengthen the agency established to eradicate discimination on account of race, religion or national origin."

THE NAACP, Wilkins pointed out, "completely endorses the Abrams proposals and hopes that they will be adopted by a future legislature."

Civil rights, he said, are regarded by the NAACP as a nonpartisan issue for which the support of Republicans, Democrats and Liberals alike is sought.

It is a "far too important" issue to be "subjected to any measure of partisanship," Mr. Wilkins added.

Answers Heck's 'Zealot' Charge

Wed. 5-1-56

The state's anti-discrimination legislation has never been popular with upstate Republican leaders because they fear its enforcement will encourage the migration of minority groups to upstate areas and upset the state's political balance, Charles Abrams, chairman of the State Commission Against Discrimination, charged yesterday.

This attitude, Mr. Abrams said, was reflected in the statement Sunday by Assembly Speaker Oswald D. Heck, R. Schenectady, that Mr. Abrams is "unfit" for his job because he is too much of a zealot."

"Political Football"

By making a political football" of the commission's work, Mr. Abrams said at a press conference, "Mr. Heck's statement may set back the work of the commission and the whole national effort to advance progress in employment and housing." He called the Speaker's statement "irresponsible, politically charged and reprehensible," and said: "It will give comfort to those who have always opposed the commission and its work and to whom the thought of racial equality is anathema."

Mr. Heck's statement about Mr. Abrams was made Sunday on the WRCA-TV program, "Citizens Union Searchlight," in response to questions about the Legislature's $38,000 cut in the $486,245 proposed by Gov. Harriman for the commission this year.

The budget fight in the Legislature centered around the Governor's request that the commission be given the power and the money to initiate complaints where it discovers instances of discrimination. Mr. Heck said Sunday he believed such power should remain with the Attorney General's office.

Cites Other Agencies

Mr. Abrams countered yesterday that the Attorney General has not yet filed one such complaint and that a number of state agencies now have the power to initiate complaints. He named the Alcoholic Beverage Control Division, the Department of Agriculture and Markets, the Insurance Department and the Banking and Public Service Commissions.

A former State Rent Commissioner who was appointed to his present post Dec. 16, Mr. Abrams said a serious aspect of Mr. Heck's attack may be that it will destroy the atmosphere of unanimity and co-operation he has been trying to create in the five-man Commission Against Discrimination. The other four commissioners, he pointed out, were appointed by former Gov. Dewey.

Up to Commission

"Under the law," Mr. Abrams said, "the commission, not the chairman, makes policy. So far all five members have been unanimous in approving Gov. Harriman's requests for legislation authorizing the commission to initiate investigations and restrain discrimination where it finds it to exist. It also approved unanimously the $186,010 budget request in addition to the $35,440 request approved before my appointment, both of which the Legislature emasculated almost in toto."

At Albany yesterday, Gov. Harriman announced that Mr. Abrams will go to Puerto Rico in June during his vacation to advise the government on financing methods for low-income rural housing. Mr. Abrams, a housing expert who has headed a number of United Nations missions in this field, said yesterday he felt an improvement in Puerto Rican housing conditions will have a bearing on the migration from that country and thus affect New York.

Negro Losing Real Problems, Says Abrams

Journal & Courier Lafayette, La. 5-20-56

SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 19 (AP)— Charles Abrams, chairman of the State Commission Against Discrimination, said Saturday the Negroes' real problems have been lost in the contest over legal and political aspects of the desegregation problem.

Abrams said, "The Negro's problem has been subordinated or cast into the background. The Negro's adjustment to his new surroundings, his job, his housing problem, status and his family life have all been forgotten in the contest over legal and political issues," Abrams said.

Abrams told the state conference of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People that the Negro problem has ceased to be a Southern issue because "today more than one-third of the country's Negroes live outside the South."

Minority Groups Are More Conscious of Protections, Abrams Report Says

Times 5-2-56

The State Commission Against Discrimination received almost as many complaints in the first half of 1956 as in all of 1955, according to Charles Abrams, chairman of the commission.

He said yesterday, however, that the increase did not necessarily mean a rise in prejudice or discrimination. He noted that the minority population subject to discrimination had grown and had become more conscious of its legal protections.

Commissioner Abrams' semi-annual report showed that in the first six months this year there had been 332 verified complaints. In all of last year there were 398. In the first half of 1953 there were 137, in the first half of 1954 a total of 174, and in the first half of 1955 a total of 240.

Three hundred thirteen complaints involved discrimination in employment, nineteen in places of public accommodation.

Ninety-two per cent of the complaints were filed in New York City. Sixty-eight per cent were lodged against employers, 22 per cent against labor unions, 6 per cent against public accommodations and 4 per cent against employment agencies.

Commissioner Abrams said a marked improvement in the attitude of employers had been noted in conferences. Important gains in minority employment and upgrading of minority labor, he added, were shown in communications, breweries, banks, retail trades and railroads.

Warning against over-optimism, Mr. Abrams predicted it would be many years before democratic hiring practices could be expected throughout the state. There are many industries, he said, in which discrimination continues in hiring and upgrading.

The small number of complaints upstate, he went on, is less an indication of democratic hiring than a relative scarcity of minority groups there.

Mr. Abrams said there had been a shift in the basis of complaints from color to national origin. In the previous eleven-years of the commission, he added, the normal complaint load was overwhelmingly based on color. This year, however, the number of complaints based on national origin has been substantially larger than the number based on color.

The change was attributed largely to the fact that two large groups of Puerto Ricans had filed complaints this year. One group charged that the members were getting less pay for harder work on the waterfront. The other alleged discrimination in working conditions.

Harriman Calls for Stronger Effort by All Citizens

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Jan. 23—Governor Harriman called today for stronger citizen efforts to eliminate discrimination in the state and the nation.

Speaking to 150 foreign-born New York residents now taking Americanization classes, the Governor declared that "we have not fully attained the objectives of the Declaration of Independence, for discrimination still exists in the United States and even in the great State of New York."

Mr. Harriman said New York had made larger strides than some other states in wiping out discrimination in employment, education and housing.

The Americanization students were representatives of more than 70,000 taking such courses in the state. They were participating in a two-day tour of Albany co-sponsored by the State Education Department and local service and civic organizations.

Abrams Asks Legislature to Grant Wider Power to Ban Housing, Job Prejudice

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 9—The State Commission Against Discrimination asked the Legislature today for broader powers to combat racial and religious prejudice in housing and employment.

Charles Abrams, who was appointed chairman of the commission last fall, declared that New York "lags behind" other Northern states in fighting discrimination. He said it should try to regain its leadership.

He announced that the five-member commission had unanimously recommended passage of two Harriman Administration bills pending before the Legislature.

One would empower the commission to make complaints on its own initiative against violators of the present anti-discrimination laws. These forbid prejudice in employment practices, public accommodation services and housing built with state or local aid.

The other bill would broaden the barrier to discrimination in housing to include projects built with assistance from the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans Administration.

Mr. Abrams said the commission's lack of power to initiate complaints hamstrung its efforts to enter cases where discrimination was not confined to an individual. These cases include employment advertising, 'Caucasian clauses" in union by-laws and segregation of work benches or washrooms.

In housing projects, he continued, renting policies may clearly exclude a minority group, but the law is difficult to enforce once a project has been completed and fully occupied. There the commission should have power to prevent discrimination without waiting for a complaint, he said.

As to the second bill, Mr. Abrams said the cost of legal action had prevented persons banned from federally assisted housing from bringing complaints in the courts. Therefore, he contended, the commission should be authorized to consider such actions.

$672,255 for State Unit on Discrimination, a Rise of 50 Per Cent, Is Asked

Representatives of twenty organizations joined yesterday to protest cuts made by Republican-controlled fiscal committees of the Legislature in funds to fight racial and religious discrimination.

They said they would seek a legislative hearing in Albany to denounce the reductions in Governor Harriman's budget as "nothing less than shocking" and to charge that the cuts threatened to make the State Commission Against Discrimination "impotent."

The groups included civic, social, religious, political and labor organizations. They said it was "absolutely necessary" to grant the commission's request for $186,010 more in the state's supplemental budget.

After a two-hour meeting at Freedom House, 20 West Fortieth Street, spokesmen for the various organizations represented made the following arguments:

The work of the commission has been increased. Salary increases mandated for personnel by state law and higher living costs have not been accompanied by proportionate increase in commission funds. An intensified effort to eliminate bias, to permit more emphasis on prevention of discrimination rather than punitive action, to create a new research department and to permit a campaign against discrimination in employment on airline and other forms of transportation justify larger appropriations.

The commission received $448,863 for operations in the 1955-56 fiscal year and asked for $486,245 for 1956-57. Restoration of the $38.122 cut and approval of the supplemental budget funds requested would bring the total for next year to $672,255, or about 50 per cent more than the current year's appropriation.

The spokesmen contended that the commission's current budget authorized a staff of sixty-six, whereas in the 1948-49 fiscal year, when the commission faced less work, its budget permitted a staff of eighty-one. Its new requests would permit the hiring of thirty-one more persons.

Co-chairmen of the groups that met were Edward S. Lewis, executive director of the Urban League of Greater New York, and Algernon D. Black, chairman of the New York State Committee on Discrimination in Housing.

Carry On Against Discrimination

Herald Tribune
Mar. 28
New York City

In cutting Governor Harriman's budget the Legislature performed a disservice by slashing the request of the State Commission Against Discrimination. At first glance the reduction of $38,122 from the requested $486,245 may not seem large, but it must be remembered that the commission is faced by increasing work load and additional jurisdictional responsibilities. This cutback would have the effect of virtually eliminating the housing division's staff and leaving only half of the funds needed for educational programs.

The record of the SCAD, established in 1945, has been a fine one. New York, the first to set up an organization of this kind, has made much progress in obtaining equal treatment for all minorities in employment, housing, public accommodations and so on. It is worth repeating that the old barriers were broken down by education and consultation. But no one can say that the strugggle against every form of discrimination has been finally won. Certainly there are big problems to be faced, such as the mass migrations from the Southern states and Puerto Rico, the relocation of minority families displaced by slum clearance, new trends in industry and the limitations on upgrading of workers according to merit. Furthermore, race relations have clearly become a challenging national situation. More attention must be paid, not less.

The New York commission, under Chairman Charles Abrams, is acutely aware of the need for an expanded program. In addition to the regular budget, it has supplemental requests of $186,010. These would establish a division of research and statistics, increase the law and investigation personnel, provide an adequate housing staff, swell the education program, and set up additional field offices. Considering all the increasing demands on SCAD, these fiscal requests are extremely modest.

Despite the adjournment rush, the Legislature should take second thought and give the commission the funds it needs to do a good job. That means reinstating the budget cuts and also granting the supplementary money. Surely New York, with its long and admirable performance on preventing and rooting out discrimination, cannot slow up now.

Whites, Negroes bat...

Teens riot in night of terror

Erie boat is scene of strife

BUFFALO, N. Y., May 31 —(AP)—Rioting among Negro and white teen-agers turned a holiday outing into a voyage of terror for passengers aboard an amusement park ship on Lake Erie last night. Scores of persons were injured in the battle of knives and fists.

What provoked the outbreak remained a mystery today.

POLICE ARRESTED eight Negroes and four whites, ranging in age from 15 to 22. All were Americans.

The disturbance began at the Crystal Beach Amusement Park in Ontario, Canada, and grew worse aboard the boat, the Canadiana. Reporters on the crowded boat described the 15-mile trip to Buffalo as "a nightmare of flashing knives and sobbing, frightened passengers."

There was no indication this morning of what action might be taken to prevent a repetiton of the incident. Attorneys for the Crystal Beach Transit Co., Inc., operator of the boat, said they would consult with the U. S. attorney here on the question of police jurisdiction over such vessels.

The only police aboard the boat last night were three employes of the transit company. Buffalo and Ontario provincial police have been barred from the boat by an international agreement.

Cpl. J. S. Legate of the Ontario police told reporters last night's disorders were "strictly racial."

But F. L. Hall, general manager of the amusement park, said the disturbance there was "not a race riot."

SIX PERSONS were treated for injuries at hospitals in Buffalo and Ft. Erie, Ont., and at least 10 others were treated for minor injuries at a first aid station at the park.

Provincial police arrested nine Buffalo youths at the beach. Five were Negroes and four were whites.

The Negro youths were charged with unlawful assembly and the whites with creating a disturbance. All were released under $500 bail each.

BUFFALO AUTHORITIES took three Negro teenagers into custody when the Canadiana docked here shortly before 11 p.m. last night.

Police said no charges were placed against them immediately.

It was not known what set off the disturbance at the beach, which broke out again on the Canadiana's second trip to Buffalo last night. The earlier trip was uneventful.

An estimated 15,000 to 20,000 persons, mostly Americans, were reported at the park yesterday.

MARGARET WYNN and Dick Hirsch of The Buffalo Courier-Express, who were aboard the three-decked steamship, reported that "nearly 40 white youngsters, several beaten or cut, cowered below decks in the ship's dining room for most of the trip after being attacked or threatened by the many Negro teenagers who made up the majority of the passengers."

The reporters estimated that of the approximately 1000 passengers, 80 per cent were Negroes.

"Members of the ship's crew and private police," the reporters wrote, "vainly attempted to keep order, but when one fight was broken up, another flared in a different portion of the weather-beaten boat."

"Most of the trouble," they continued, "was caused by gangs of Negro girls who walked the deck, attacking and molesting young white girls.

"FIRECRACKERS were carelessly flung at passengers, exploding at their feet. Several received powder burns. Switchblade knives were brandished. Youngsters were shoved to the deck by the rampaging mobs which rushed back and forth over the decks.

"Many older white persons were segregated by worried crew members. They sat quietly in roped off sections of the slow-moving ship, attempting to comfort their crying, terrified children," the reporters wrote.

Violence reportedly first broke out on the afternoon boat trip to the beach and then spilled over into the park itself.

Corp. Legate said the trouble there started in a picnic grove when three white youths and three Negro youths started fighting. Two more Negroes and another white joined in, he said.

FOUR POLICE officers on duty at a guardhouse near the park entrance broke up the fighting, he said, as thousands of persons started milling around the combatants. The nine originators were placed in the guardhouse.

Legate said that within a half hour 300 Negroes converged on the guardhouse and threatened to free the jailed.

He said he put in a call for reinforcements and that the crowd began to disperse when the other police officers arrived.

Then witnesses said bottles were hurled and fist fights broke out sporadically among the mob.

FBI Probes Teen Riots

On Cruise

BUFFALO, N.Y., May 31 (AP)—The Federal Bureau of Investigation today opened a "full and complete investigation" of the riot-torn passage of an excursion steamer from Crystal Beach, Ont., to Buffalo last night.

Fist and knife-slinging brawlers, both white and Negro, disrupted the holiday at the beach for thousands of Buffalo residents and turned the night's final run of the steamer Canadiana into an hour of terror.

At least 50 persons were injured. Seven received hospital treatment.

U.S. JURISDICTION

The FBI action was requested by U.S. Dist. Atty. John O. Henderson, who said after spending the day studying the knotty jurisdictional question:

"I am pretty well convinced we have at least concurrent jurisdiction with local authorities."

Meanwhile, federal assault complaints were filed against two of 12 youths arrested here and in Crystal Beach.

Henderson declined to discuss in detail the question of how far U.S. jurisdiction extends on the Canadiana's route. But he indicated that the vessel's American registry entered into the question and that the jurisdiction might extend to the dock on the Canadian side.

3 MORE ARRESTED

Ontario provincial police arrested five Negro youths and four whites at Crystal Beach, a resort and amusement center on the north shore of Lake Erie 15 miles west of Buffalo. They ranged in age from 15 to 22.

When the Canadiana docked in Buffalo late last night, three more Negro boys were picked up.

Two of these last three were named in the assault complaint filed by Ralph Green, first mate of the vessel. Green led the crew detail that tried to quell the brawling on the upper deck as peaceful passengers, both Negro and white, cowered in roped-off sections or lower-deck public rooms.

Order to Admit Negroes Upheld

NEW YORK, April 21 (AP)—Attempts to circumvent New York state antidiscrimination laws by organization of a club or association have been ruled illegal by an appellate court.

The appellate division of the state supreme court sustained an order directing the Castle Hill Beach Club in the Bronx to admit Negroes and others on a nondiscriminatory basis.

The court unanimously sustained a 1955 ruling by supreme court Justice Martin M. Frank which had supported an order of the state commission against discrimination.

The club had contended it was a "private, nonprofit organization" not within the scope of the "public accomodation" provision of the law.

Frank ruled that the Castle Hill Beach Club was not actually a club but "a place of public accommodation." If it had been known at the time the place organized as a membership club that Negroes would be excluded, he said, "it is reasonable to assume that the application for approval would have been denied."

Stork Club To Negroes: 'Go to Hell!'

Courier p. 2
Pittsburgh Pa.
Sat. 6-30-56

By EVELYN CUNNINGHAM

NEW YORK—Nobody—white or colored—likes to talk about the Stork Club fracas. It's a source of great shame and smoldering anger. Negroes especially are disheartened to realize with a bang that the problem is a long way from being solved, that the fight still has to be carried.

What happened was that a fashion show sponsored by the highly reputable National Association of Fashion and Accessories Designers, was cancelled literally hours before the affair was scheduled.

To date, Stork Club owner Sherman Billingsley has mumbled remarks like "publicity," "Josephine Baker," "Go to hell." The association has turned the matter over to its attorney, Thomas Dyett, and whether or not legal action will depend upon the results of a meeting of executive members of NAFAD in Boston next month.

Meanwhile, Harlem's reaction was unique. There was an almost unanimous immediate reaction, followed by an equally unanimous change of opinion. At first, people said, in effect, "I don't know why the fashion group should bother trying to get in a place where they aren't wanted. Billingsley has made it clear time and time again that he doesn't want Negroes." And with this was profound humiliation and a fleeting thought that perhaps Montgomery was getting its problem solved lots faster than we.

Like a signal, there has been a change-about: "Why not go to the Stork Club? Who cares whether the guy wants us or not? We want the right to go any time we want. Why be scared of the Stork Club? It's just a bar and grill. How great can Billingsley be?"

With the exception of the New York Post, daily newspapers have conspicuously avoided any mention of the slur. Even columnists, who are quicker than silver to express an opinion, have been silent. The same newspapers who give up long columns to deploring the position of the Negro in the South and to raising cain about injustices in Dixie, apparently aren't quite ready to tackle a local problem, even a relatively small problem.

Negroes wonder: Maybe Billingsley IS a power. Maybe there are influential whites who actually DO want a last stronghold that is lily-white. Maybe they think we ought to be satisfied with the Supreme Court and not get too far out of line. Who knows?

But Negroes don't like it at all.

'De Facto' Segregation In New York

Advertiser 4-a
Sat. 4-28-56
Montgomery Ala.

NEW YORK has coined a phrase to describe the kind of segregation it has in public schools: "de facto segregation"—that is separation of the races that exists in fact although not in law.

The Board of Education's Committee on Integration has partly completed a "master plan" which will "set up a pattern for desegregating schools that will serve as a model for the whole nation."

Major target of the plan, according to The New York Times, is the "elimination, so far as possible, of segregated schools—institutions that have an overwhelming number of pupils of one racial or ethnic background."

New York's far-sighted neo-abolitionists are fond of saying, when accused of practicing segregation themselves, that this can't be true because they have laws which say it isn't so. But recent studies have confirmed what should have been an obvious fact all along: segregation, though not called that, is a fact in many New York schools. A recent visitor to Montgomery, who happens to be an editor of one of this country's largest national magazines (pro-integration, incidentally), told us that race separation in New York public schools is more rigid today than it was before World War II, an observation which seems to be borne out by the report of the Commission on Integration.

It also appears that New York hasn't even been living up to the separate but equal doctrine which the South has been striving to achieve, with some success, in recent years. A subcommittee's report on physical plants found a pressing need for "more and better" schools for Negroes and Puerto Ricans.

So far behind were these schools, the subcommittee said, they would not be equalized by simply spending the same amount per pupil "in areas of minority concentration" as is spent on white schools. Presumably, the per-pupil expenditure on predominantly Negro and Puerto Rican schools must be raised above that spent on white children in order to equalize facilities—a problem familiar to Southern legislatures and school officials but just now dawning on New York.

One of the subcommittee members, Dr. Kenneth B. Clark, associate professor of psychology at City College, said that examination of educational standards in "schools attended by Negro and Puerto Rican children shows that these are lower than those found in schools with children of middle class families." But, he reasoned, since scientific studies have not revealed any basic intellectual differences among racial groups, the poor scholarship of Negroes and Puerto Ricans must be laid to differences in "environmental opportunity and stimulation." It is therefore incumbent on New York to provide Negroes and Puerto Ricans "an enriched curriculum, better teaching, smaller classes, more adequate educational facilities, pleasant school atmosphere," etc.

In short, separate schools in New York should be made more equal. This is a worthy aim which Southerners will applaud even if New York does not live up to the lofty goal of Charles H. Silver, president of the New York Board of Education, when he said:

> The public schools of New York will demonstrate in their program of integration that the spirit of the Supreme Court decision will be carried forward in the classroom.

But we are again given pause to wonder whether New York's admitted "de facto segregation" is more moral, as they have seemed to contend, than the South's de jure segregation—that is, separation of the races by law—which is at least honest and forthright.

Religious Leaders Ask That Parties Ban Election Bias

Pittsburgh Post
Sat. 8-10-56

NEW YORK (NC)—An appeal to all citizens of the United States to "reject political arguments based on racial or religious prejudices and to rebuke those who make such appeals," was issued here by six prominent ecclesiastical leaders.

The joint statement, speaking in behalf of the three major faiths, will be sent to Leonard W. Hall and Paul M. Butler, national chairmen of the Republican and Democratic parties, respectively.

TWO OF THE SIX signers are Catholics—Archbishop Edwin V. O'Hara, Bishop of Kansas City, Mo., and George N. Shuster, president of Hunter College, New York.

The others are the Rev. Dr. Eugene Carson Blake, president of the National Council of the Churches of Christ in the U.S.A.; Rabbi Abraham J. Feldman, president of the Synagogue Council of America; Mrs. Mildred McAfee Horton, chairman of the Division of Christian Life and Work of the National Council of Churches, and Irving M. Engel, president of the American Jewish Committee.

Sixth Person Is Arrested In Racial Pamphlet Case

News & Observer p. 1

Sat. 6-2-56

CHARLOTTE, June 1 (AP)—Mecklenburg County police continued their crackdown on alleged distributors of "hate" literature today, arresting a sixth person and confiscating more pamphlets and printed material.

Raleigh, N.C.

Robert Lee Heger, 27, was taken into custody at his home on Rt. 10 by officers who said they found six envelopes addressed to be mailed in his handwriting. The envelopes contained anti-Semitic literature.

Heger told offcers the pamphlets were given him by P. C. Wyatt, one of the five men arrested yesterday and charged with violating Section 14-394 of the General Statutes. This section makes it illegal to send certain defamatory letters through the mail.

Arrested with Wyatt yesterday were Joseph C. Bryant, Arthur W. Bryant, and Elmer E. Rogers. Albert B. Rogers gave himself up this morning. All have been served with additional warrants charging conspiracy.

Heger was quoted by officers as saying that Wyatt "kept after me to join those organizations"—the States Rights League, Patriots of North Carolina, and the Ku Klux Klan.

Police said they found a printing press at the Art Stone Works, operated by Arthur W. Bryant, along with handbills with headlines reading "Jew Religion Exposed." They also found membership applications for the Ku Klux Klan.

One of the handbills attacked Julian Scheer, a columnist for the Charlotte News, officers said.

Future Of Three Veteran Congressmen Who Balked Up For Decision

By The United Press

RALEIGH, N. C., May 26.—The issue of whether to resist the United States Supreme Court rulings against segregated schools put the future of three veteran congressmen at stake Saturday in the North Carolina Democratic primary.

Across the state an estimated half-million Democrats voted in the 12 hours ending at 6:30 p.m. Most interest lay in the contests for Congress in the Fourth, Fifth and Eighth Districts—the three in which the racial issue was dominant.

12 Others Signed It

The three incumbents were Representatives Harold D. Cooley, Thurmond D. Chatham and Charles B. Deane, the only ones among 15 North Carolina members of Congress who refused to sign the recent Southern Manifesto in which 100 Southern senators and representatives pledged to resist the school segregation decision by every lawful means.

Representative Cooley, Chatham and Deane refused to sign because they felt the manifesto was too bitter. All three have taken stands favoring segregation, but prefer a "moderate" approach. Mr. Cooley was opposed by W. E. Debnam of Raleigh, Mr. Chatham by Ralph J. Scott of Danbury and Mr. Deane by Paul Kitchin of Wadesboro.

Gov. Luther H. Hodges, first Tarheel governor in more than 60 years eligible to succeed himself, was a heavy favorite against three little-known opponents, all of whom took strong pro-segregation stands.

Ervin Seeks Full Term

Senator Sam J. Ervin Jr. of Morgantown was favored heavily in his race for a full term. He was opposed by Winston-Salem Mayor Marshall Kurfees.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 26. — (UP) — Representative Glenn Davis of Waukesha, a last-minute candidate, stormed the Wisconsin Republican convention Saturday to defeat Senator Alexander Wiley for the party's endorsement for United States senator.

Loss of the endorsement was a major political setback for the veteran Chippewa Falls senator, who is finishing his third six-year term. However, Mr. Wiley, who was 72 Saturday, is expected to run against Mr. Davis, 41, in the September primary despite loss of the party organization's blessing.

'Ready,' youths say of total integration

Afro-American Sat. 6-30-56

Baltimore, Md.

CHARLOTTE, N.C. — "They decided that segregation has built up a psychological block in the minds of both colored and white youth and that that block is eliminated." P. 16

That is how Mrs. Ione Jones summed up the findings of a group of Biddleville Presbyterian Church youth after an intensive study of segregation and came up with the answer "Yes" to the question "Are We Ready for Total Integration."

The study was undertaken in an effort to give colored youth a fair picture of the overall problem of segregation and integration from a Christian point of view, according to the sponsors.

THE GROUP probed books, heard civic and religious leaders speak and held discussion sessions under the leadership of the Rev. H. W. Givens, pastor of the church, and three advisors.

Final speaker before the group was the Rev. Edward A. Cahill of the Unitarian Church here who, in praising the study conducted by the youths, said he believed they had a well conceived program and that he knew of no other youth group that had studied the problem so intensely.

The group set out about seven weeks ago to find answers to some questions on segregation to get a working philosophy so that they, as young Christians, could live with the situation, said Mrs. Jones, one of the advisors.

* * *

"THEY BASED their answer to integration on the fact that colored Americans have no separate culture and are a product of the American culture," Mrs. Jones added.

Referring to the Biblical stories of the Good Samaritan and the woman who met Christ at the well, the group agreed that the Christian attitude on race should be the same as that of Christ toward all people.

On the question of what young people can do to promote better interracial undertanding, the group agreed that they should be fair in their thinking and attitudes toward others.

THEY ALSO agreed, according to Mrs. Jones, that it is important to study the history of other racial groups and the part they played and are playing in American life.

"To eliminate indulgence in the use of widely used labels such as "n---r, wop, kike and cracker" is important in the effort to better racial understanding," she said the group agreed at the Sunday discussion sessions.

In short, Mrs. Jones concluded simple everyday courtesy was found to be one of the most important ways to improve race relations and human understanding.

White Attorney Jailed After Integration Talk

Special To Journal And Guide

WARRENTON, N. C. — An attorney ousted from a civic club after he criticized racial segregation, was arrested Friday night when he tried to attend a meeting of the Warrenton Lions Club.

Attorney James G. Gilliland appeared as counsel for several North Carolina people being investigated by a congressional committee at Charlotte several weeks ago. When the hearing ended, he suggested Congress probe North Carolina's school segregation policy.

Norfolk, Va.

GILLILAND termed the youth's attitude of resistance to the U. S. Supreme Court segregation decision "Unamerican" and argued that "A large number of officials are apparently in a conspiracy to deny children their right to an education."

When the attorney got back home he was promptly voted out of the Warrenton Country club, and ousted from the Lions Club, in which he had been active and had held the office of secretary.

* * *

FRIDAY NIGHT, GILLILAND went through a kitchen door into the dining hall where the Lions Club was to meet. Other members of the club refused to enter the room, and Gilliland was finally arrested and charged with trespassing.

He was released on $100 bond and was ordered to appear in Mayor's Court before Mayor J. E. Rooker, who is also president of the Lions Club.

Disagreement over rest room gets 2 in toils

Afro-American p. 12

NASHVILLE, N.C.—A Rocky Mount youth and a Nash County man were given 120-day road terms on driving charges and held under $1,500 bonds on an assault count Monday because one insisted on using the rest room of a white drive-in restaurant.

Baltimore,

Walter Mills, 23, and Percy Lewis, 19, were sentenced on the driving charges in Nash County Recorder's Court on the testimony of Alvin Joyner, manager of the restaurant.

According to testimony, Lewis used the restaurant restroom over Joyner's protest and beat up C. T. Johnston of Nashville, white, when he engaged in an argument with Lewis about his right to do so. Johnson, reported badly beaten, required hospitalization.

Sat. 12-29-56

JOHNSON SAID that he pursued the pair to try to get their license number when they drove off in their car.

They jumped a red light, he said, and lost him when they drove more than 80 miles an hour in the chase. Joyner reported the incident to police who arrested the two at their homes.

After receiving the traffic penalties on Joyner's testimony, the two waived a preliminary hearing on the assault charges.

Jim Crow Drowns Swim Pool Closes

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

Sat. 8-11-56

By JOSEPHUS SIMPSON

CHAPEL HILL, N.C. — When the U.S. Supreme Court's decision outlawed segregation in public-owned parks and recreation facilities last October Jim Crow slipped into the University of North Carolina pool and "drowned."

Saddened by that "tragedy," officials of the university have decided—after local colored children asked about swimming there — to drop its summer swimming course "for white children" after this year.

Without saying so in so many words, Chancellor R. B. House made that fact clear last week in announcing that season tickets, which entitle holders to use the course in the outdoor campus pool, would no longer be sold.

* * *

HE SAID his action was based on the fact that on July 23, "inquiries were made on behalf of colored children." He added, however, that no colored persons actually applied for tickets.

Officials of the school acted on informal advice received several months ago from State Attorney General William B. Rodman, according to reliable sources here.

"I have told university officials in previous conferences that we could not because of color, and color alone, deny equal privileges or opportunities to races," the attorney general said when asked about the action.

* * *

THE STATE attorney general added, however, that he also told university officials that "They have a right to close any classes for any reason that would help efficient operation of their plant."

Exclusion of colored people—or anyone else — from this summer's swimming course for local children, however, will not affect colored students enrolled at the university. That was made clear by a university official.

The same official explained that the university administration felt that all applications for tickets must be refused in order to save the swimming program for the balance of this summer.

He added that the inquires on the part of colored persons had been expected for some time.

* * *

ACTING President William C. Friday confirmed the fact that the inquiries were not surprising, adding that he had conferred "several months ago" with the attorney general about "several university problems."

Asked about the future of the children's swimming program, Chancellor House refused to elaborate on his previous handout on the subject. Pressed, he said: "I'm no prophet and I'll say no more than what's in my statement."

However, since the attorney general has advised that "it would be impossible to refuse tickets to colored persons and continue selling to whites," evidently the program is dead.

* * *

MR. RODMAN obviously based his opinion on the Supreme Court's public park decision handed down last October.

As a result of that decision, five cities in the state now permit colored persons to play without discrimination on the municipal golf courses. They are Wilmington, Gastonia, Asheville, High Point and Asheboro.

N. Carolina U. May Drop Kids Summer Swim Course Due To Negro Interest

Weekly New Orleans, La. Sat. 8-18-56

Chapel Hill, N. C. - (ANP) - The reported interest of Negroes in the summer swimming course sponsored by the University of North Carolina may lead to the abandoning of the program, it was announced here last week by R. B. House, university chancellor.

Sale of season tickets--entitling holders to the course in the outdoor campus pool--were discontinued last July 23, when "inquiries were made on behalf of Negro children."

House said, however, that no Negroes actually applied.

It seems the university is anticipating efforts by Negroes to put to use the U. S. Supreme Court decision of last October outlawing segregation in public-owned parks and recreation facilities.

House said that State Atty.-General William B. Rodman gave the university three legal opinion that it could not because of "color, and color alone, deny equal privileges or opportunities to races."

"However, Rodman had added that the university "did have the right to close classes for any reason that would help efficient operation of the plant."

The barring of Negroes from the swimming course will not, however, have any effect on Negroes enrolled as regular students at the university.

N. C. Fans Sue City To End Segregation

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

Sat. 9-29-56

WILSON, N.C.—A suit asking an end to segregated seating in Municipal Stadium here, leased for professional baseball and other sports activities, was filed in U. S. District Court last week.

Plaintiffs in the action are the Rev. T. A. Watkins, pastor of First Baptist Church; I. B. Butler, O. N. Ellis, James Hart and Miss Helen Ford. C. O. Pearson, Durham attorney, is counsel for the group.

The petition filed by Mr. Pearson, an NAACP attorney, charges that the plaintiffs tried to enter the granstand at the stadium for a baseball game and were turned away.

IT IS POINTED OUT in the petition that they were refused seats in the grandstand although they held season tickets and that the only seating offered colored persons is a bleacher section accommodating about 50 persons.

Dr. G. K. Butterfield, a member of the city's board of commissioners (City Council), was among the group that was refused admission to the grandstand last April 25, but is not a party to the suit.

* * *

NAMED DEFENDANTS in the petition are the City of Wilson, Mayor John D. Wilson and City Manager N. Jack Maynard. No date has been set for a hearing on the petition, it was indicated.

City Stadium is leased during the baseball season by the Wilson Tobs, affiliate of the Philadelphia Phillies, in the Class B. Carolina League. Some Carolina League teams have colored players, but Wilson has none.

The petition also points out that the plaintiffs held a conference with the city commissioners May 10 and asked that the policy of segregation be ended, but that their request was denied.

* * *

AS A RESULT of that refusal, the plaintiffs state, they are asking an injunction against the segregated seating and a final decree setting forth their legal rights "and the class of people they represent."

The local stadium is also used as a public playground, by American Legion junior baseball teams, by the city recreation department and for other sports activities, mostly for white persons.

J. C. seating under attack

Afro-American Baltimore Md.

WILSON, N.C. — The jim-crow. seating policy in force here for Carolina League baseball games was under attack this week in United States District Court.

Five local residents, all baseball fans, brought the action in the hope of putting an end to segregated stands in Municipal Stadium, where the Wilson team plays its games in the Class C loop.

Plaintiffs are the Rev. T. A. Watkins, pastor of the First Baptist Church; I. B. Butler, O. N. Ellis, James Hart and Helen Ford.

ALL ASSERT that they have been deprived of grandstand seats for which they hold season tickets. They declare that the only seating provided for them was in the jim-crow "colored" section which accommodates about 50 patrons.

The lone colored member of the City Board of Commissioners, Dr. G. K. Butterfield, was in the party at the time it was denied admittance to the grandstand. He is not one of the plaintiffs, however.

RACE HATE PAMPHLETS SEIZED; FIVE ARRESTED

Daily World Tues. 6-5-56 P. 1

PAPERS ATTACK NEGRO, JEWISH ORGANIZATIONS

Birm., Ala.

CHARLOTTE, N. C.—Five men, believed to be key figures in the spreading of race hate literature, were arrested Friday in Charlotte on charges growing out of recent attacks on organizations designed to aid minority groups.

A police raid on the businesses and homes of the white suspects Thursday uncovered a quantity of unsigned literature attacking the Anti-Defamation League and the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Police said they also found application blanks for membership in the Ku Klux Klan, a klan robe and mask, a printing press, dynamite, guns, a roster of members of the States' Rights League, nude photographs, and plates of photographic comic drawings.

SPECIFIC CHARGES

Specifically the five men are charged with distributing and mailing pamphlets attacking Alfred E Smith, president of the Charlotte branch of the ADL, an arm of the B'nai B'rith Jewish order.

The charges were brought under state laws which make it a misdemeanor to mail or transmit threatening written or printed material which is not signed.

Leaflets seized by police said the Anti-Defamation League is "The American Jewish Gestapo of secret police and an offspring of B'nai B'rith, a so-called brotherhood of Jews."

This group of leaflets also contended that ADL "intimidated and coerced" the Charlotte City Council to pass an ordinance banning what they called hate literature."

$1,000 BOND

Each of the five men, who live either in Charlotte or its suburbs, must post $1,000 each for release until trial.

Arresting officers said pamphlets were also found deriding the NAACP as "The National Association for the Agitation of Colored People.'

Those under arrest were identified as: Arthur W. Bryant, 35, owner of the Art Stone Works; Percy Clarence Wyatt, 44, a stonemason, who said he was a native of Winston-Salem; Joe Bryant, owner of the Bryant Stone Co.; Albert Rogers and E. E. Rogers.

N. Carolina Legislature will study segregation

RALEIGH, June 1—(AP)—North Carolina's General Assembly will convene in special session July 23 to clear the way for constitutional changes to meet the school segregation problem.

Gov. Hodges announced the calling of the special session at his news conference yesterday. He said he hoped the lawmakers wouldn't be in session more than a week.

In announcing the special ses- These would require changes in the state's constitution which would have to be voted on in the November general election.

ONE CHANGE would provide state tuition grants for students whose parents do not want them to attend racially integrated schools. Another would permit a local school unit to suspend the operation of schools if conditions in that unit became "intolerable."

During the 1955 session, the legislators passed the North Carolina school assignment act. This gave control of assigning pupils to local authorities.

sion date, Hodges said it had the approval of legislative leaders.

The legislators will be asked to write into law the recommendations of the state's advisory committee on education.

Deane of North Carolina in his final address to the House of Representatives told his colleagues last night, "We in this House have the unique privilege and responsibility to turn the tide of history in America and the world. Before we can have a new nation and a new world we must have new men. We must live a superior ideology." P. 1

Relating his experience last year with the Moral Re-Armament States men's Mission in the Middle East, Africa and Europe, Congressman Deane said, "In every country thousands responded to the plays and the ideology of MRA. The statesman, student and ordinary man said, "This is what my country needs'

"From this experience, Mr. Speaker, I am convinced," Mr. Deane continued, "that the statesmen and the ordinary man can change and play his rightful part in the remaking of men and nations.

In a forty-five minute tribute twenty-two Members from both Parties, representing all sections of America, rose one after the other at their seats to honor Congressman Deane. He lost his seat in the House in the May primary because of his courageous and statesmanlike stand in declining to sign a manifesto which attacked the United States Supreme Court on the issue of segregation.

Congressman John McCormack of Massachusetts, Majority Leader of the House, said, "The Congressman leaves here not defeated but a victor because he was able to overcome human impulses and to act in accordance with faith and principals he believed in. Instead of leaving here as one defeated for renomination he leaves here a victor because he has won a victory by acting in accordance with his own conscience."

Congressman William Dawson of Illinois said, "I am sure that this event that is coming into the life of our friend is just the beginning of the thing that shall encompass increasing numbers of men until there will have passed from this earth all hatred between mankind."

Moral Re-Armament brings men together," said Congressman Sieminski of New Jersey. "With roots that firmly grip the granite truth MRA rids man of hate."

Colored Leaders Leave 'Integrated' Fund Dinner

Journal + Guide P. 1 Norfolk, Va.

SALISBURY, N. C.—Under charges that they were being discriminated against, all but about three of the 25 to 30 Negroes attending the Rowan United Fund Drive left the opening dinner meeting of the drive.

Sat. 10-20-56

The Rev. Harlee Little of Livingstone College, said members of the group told him they walked out because they were served after white groups which had arrived later.

THE MANAGER of the hotel denied the group was discriminated against and said "We served them just like we would anyone else."

The Negroes and whites were "integrated" after a fashion in this campaign. Heretofore, there had been separate Community Chest campaigns with separate Negro divisions.

At the dinner, the Negro group had been seated by itself at a table near the entrance to the kitchen.

Challenge N. C. golf links dodge

Baltimore, Md.

Sat. 10-27-56

GREENSBORO, N.C. "The Gillespie Park Golf Club was organized for the express purpose of aiding the City of Greensboro in carrying out its policies of excluding colored citizens from the municipally owned golf course."

That charge was made last week by attorneys for 10 citizens who were refused golfing privileges on a "private" course here last week as they challenged the city's right to avoid integration by leasing public lands.

THE PETITION IN the suit, filed in U.S. District Court here Wednesday, asked the court to issue an immediate injunction "forever restraining the City of Greensboro from: "Denying colored people the use and enjoyment of any golf course or park maintained, established or operated by the City of Greensboro on account of race or color."

The suit was the first of its kind aimed at breaking down North Carolina's segregation laws in line with the U.S. Supreme Court decision last year against forced segregation in public parks.

Suit Asks End To Bias At City-Owned Stadium

Journal + Guide Sat. 9-22-56

Norfolk, Va.

Special to Journal and Guide

WILSON, N. C. — A suit filed by five local residents in U. S. District Court here last week asks an end to "buzzard roost" bleacher seating of colored fans at the local Municipal stadium. P.1

The suit also asks that operators of the city-owned facility be enjoined from further practice of segregated seating.

* * *

THE SUIT follows by a few months refusal of admission to grandstand seats at the stadium of a party of local colored residents, including Dr. G. K. Butterfield, a member of the city board of commissioners.

Journal + Guide

Last April 25, Dr. Butterfield, along with others, attempted to enter the grandstand at the stadium to witness a baseball game. Admission was denied the party despite the fact all had season tickets to attend games of the Wilson Tobs, Class B Carolina League team affiliated with hte Philadelphia Phillies. The Tobs, incidentally, are among the few Carolina League teams that don't have Negro players.

* * *

BRINGING THE suit, which charges that the stadium offers only bleacher seats accommodating only about 50 fans are the Rev. T. A. Watkins, pastor of the First Baptist Church; I. B. Butler, O. N. Ellis, James Hare and Mrs. Helen Ford. Dr. Butterfield is not listed as a plaintiff in the action.

The stadium ,in addition to being leased to the baseball club, is also used by the city recreation department, as a public school playground and for American Legion junior baseball.

A group of local residents asked the board of commissioners last May 10 to drop segregation bars at the stadium, but the board refused to do so. The current suit specifically asks a final decree setting for the legal rights of the plaintiffs and "the class of people they represent." C. O. Pearson of Durham, chairman of the State NAACP legal redress committee, is representing the plaintiffs in the action.

Dynamite blast Rips N. C. Church

Daily Worker Atlanta, Ga.

GREENSBORO, N. C. — (ANP) —An investigation was underway last week to determine the cause of a dynamite explosion that ripped through a small Negro church here almost totally demolishing the structure Monday night.

Authorities had no immediate explanation for the blast which shattered the Poplar Grove Methodist Church on the Old Reidsville road here.

However, several residents of the area said they head the explosion stating that it occurred between 8 and 8:30 p. m. No one was in the church at the time.

Sheriff John E. Walter said the damage to the little edifice indicated that about five sticks of dynamite had been thrown through a window into the church.

The impact of the blast knocked out windows, widened cracks in the brick structure, punctured the coiling with splinters, blew a 15-inch hole through the flooring and sub-flooring, reduced wooden bench es to splinters and ripped the super structure of the basement.

Poplar Grove School, near the church was not damaged by the concussion but three windows were broken by rocks thrown during the night.

White Barber Says Negroes Demand Haircuts

News + Observer Raleigh, N.C. Dec. 13-56 P.13

BAYBORO, Dec. 13—From all indications, Pamlico County — which was the scene of the first public school integration suit in North Carolina, seems headed for a new kind of integration fight, perhaps the first of its kind.

The owner of a local white barber shop, following a series of demands by a dozen or more Negroes over the past three weeks was warned over the past weekend by a Negro lawyer that he faces a suit in Eastern federal court unless he opens up his shop to members of the Negro race which he flatly stated he would never do.

Albert Edwards, owner and operator of this town's only white barber shop, said that 12 and possibly more Negroes since early November have appeared in his shop asking that he cut their hair. In each instance he has flatly and at times heatedly refused. The Negroes, all of them unknown to him, have appeared in groups of two or more.

Edwards said that in every case the Negroes were well dressed and mannerly and left quietly and promptly when he refused to cut their hair. At times he has been alone in his shop; at other times, there have been white customers waiting their turn. He says that he has not the slightest knowledge of the identity or residence of the Negroes.

The last two to appear came in last Friday and appeared to be more interested in his reason for refusal of service than in getting hair cuts, he said. It was at this time that one of the pair definitely indicated that unless Edwards opens up his shop to Negroes, he will be sued in federal court. Edwards said that at least one of the men who came in Friday indicated that he was a lawyer.

When asked what he would do if a federal judge ordered him to open his shop to all races Edwards said he would shut up his shop and serve only white persons from his home "by appointment." In doing this he said he would be following a common practice among beauty shops.

"I told them definitely and I repeat it now that under no circumstances will I cut Negroes' hair," declared Edwards who lives at nearby Stonewall. "If I have to I will shut up my shop, and there is no law in the land which is going to make me cut the hair of Negroes."

The affair has stirred all of this county. Who the Negroes are and where they are coming from is a subject of much debate, but it is certain that they are not Pamlico County Negroes and that no one here has yet been able to identify any of them.

The common supposition is that they are being sent here by a branch of the NAACP, planning to start a "test case" in Eastern federal court based upon the incidents taking place at the local barber shop.

However, when questioned over the telephone at her New Bern residence, the executive secretary of the nearby NAACP chapter, Mrs. Esther Baker replied that she knew nothing of the whole affair and that the news conveyed by this reporter to her was her very first knowledge of the whole affair.

Edwards said that the whole affair has upset him terribly and that during the past few weeks he has lost 17 pounds.

N. C. Superior Court Opens Golf Course After Civil Battle for 5 Years

Des Moines, Iowa

Charlotte, N. The first suit was brought by the Commission, itself, immediately after the Negroes protested to it. Sought in that suit was a declaratory judgment as to the validity of certain provisions in the deeds conveying the property on which the golf course is located on the condition that the land would revert if non-whites used the recreational facilities. Denial of Rights

Several days later the Negroes themselves led a suit, seeking an injunction restraining the Commission from denying them the use of the park on the ground that such exclusion was a denial of their constitutional rights. This suit, however, was continued pending final disposition of the earlier action and, therefore, did not come to trial until Dec. 7.

In granting the injunction Friday, Superior Court Judge Susie Sharp was not persuaded by the fact that the city possibly stands to lose one-third of the property which comprises Revolution Park because of the decisions in the earlier case and sustained the validity of the reverter provision. Judge Sharp, however, delayed the effective date of the injunction for 90 days to allow the city time to acquire or regain possession of the property affected by the reverter clasues.

Appearing on behalf of the Negroes throughout the litigation were Spottswood W. Robinson, II of Richmond, Va., Southeast Regional Counsel of the Legal Defense Fund and T. H. Wyche of Charlotte.

Governor Mum on His Candidacy; 'Explosive Race Issue' Paramount

By JAY JENKINS

Atlanta, Ga.

Raleigh Bureau, The Charlotte Observer
Special to The Atlanta Journal-Constitution

RALEIGH, N.C., Dec. 31—Old 1955 moved off into that part of limbo reserved for used years without seeing many changes in the politics promised for 1956.

Gov. Hodges still talked — and refused to talk—like a certain candidate for reelection at the primary next May. He's expected to make it official within the next four weeks.

Dr. Henry Jordan, the Cedar Falls dentist, still commands major attention as a possible opponent for Hodges. However, some of his strongest supporters believe he is growing cool to the idea.

This speculation was heightened when Dr. Henry's brother, B. Everett Jordan of Saxapahaw, said he was not "encouraging" Henry to make the race.

Everett Jordan is a former chairman of the State Democratic Executive Committee and now is the party's national committeeman. He is credited with keeping brother Henry—who was Gov. W. Kerr Scott's highway chairman — from jumping into the race in 1948 against the late William B. Umstead.

Among the factors being weighed by Henry, said Everett, is party harmony. Henry is afraid his race might bring sharp factionalism to the party at a time when harmony predominates.

"We need harmony now as never before," said Everett. "We have got to deal with this explosive race issue. I told Henry that some issues are more important than individuals."

Dr. Jordan could get into the campaign with the blessing of some of Sen. Scott's top brass, including his campaign manager in the 1954 Senatorial race, Terry Sanford of Fayetteville. If Jordan backs down, Sanford may jump in.

Meanwhile, the "Patriots of North Carolina, Inc.," an organization dedicated to maintaining the "purity of the white race" and school segregation, has added a political hue. The organization has grown from 356 incorporators(among whom were three former speakers of the State House of Representatives) to some 20,000 members.

Republican Is Leader

Down in Lee County, normally a Democratic stronghold, the Patriots are being led by a Republican—E. L. Gavin of Sanford, former GOP candidate for state and congressional offices. This greatly disturbed a publisher-Democrat, Bill Horner.

At a press conference, Horner hopefully asked Gov. Hodges to comment on the Patriots. The governor responded by saying that "properly directed, the Patriots can be a force for good and I have no reason to think it is not properly directed."

Gov. Hodges elaborated. He urged moderation, but added that did not mean the Patriots should not "be vigorous, with a fighting point of view."

Intentionally or not, the governor's statement came within hours after a dirigible-sized trial balloon was launched in Gastonia on behalf of District Solicitor Basil Whitener, former president of the state Young Democrats. The story had it Whitener was considering running for governor on a proseg-regation platform, with the endorsement of the Patriots.

There were no signs that the brief Whitener boom was thriving, however. Patriots spokesmen have said they will ride along with Gov. Hodges' "voluntary segregation" proposal for awhile.

Congressional Races

Several congressional races are shaping up elsewhere. In the Sixth District, Rep. Carl Durham of Chapel Hill has an announced opponent in the person of State Sen. Ralph Scott of Haw River, a brother of the state's junior U.S. senator.

Alton A. Lennon of Wilmington, who served briefly in the U.S. Senate after Willis Smith died and was defeated last year by Kerr Scott, has given clear indications he may oppose Rep. F. Ertel Carlyle of Lumberton in the Seventh District.

Capitol Square rumors have it that these incumbent congressmen also will have opposition next May: Herbert C. Bonner of Washington, N.C., First District; Woodrow Jones of Rutherfordton, 11th District, and Hugh Q. Alexander of Kannapolis, Ninth District.

Primary attention again will focus on the 10th District, where the state's lone Republican congressman, Charles R. Jonas of Lincolnton, will be seeking his third term. Among possible opponents for Jonas is Ben E. Douglas of Charlotte, former mayor of that city and the recently retired director of the Department of Conservation and Development.

Charlotte to Delay Park Desegregation

News + Observer

CHARLOTTE, Jan. 6 (AP) — The Charlotte Park and Recreation Commission has no immediate plans for discussing desegregation of park facilities.

"Contrary to . . . reports, the park board has never officially discussed the question of desegregation of Charlotte park facilities and has no intention of discussing this question at its next meeting scheduled for Jan. 10," Board Chairman Ernest Sifford said today.

SIX NEGRO GOLFERS FINED IN CAROLINA

Times

GREENSBORO, N. C., Jan. 30 (UP)—Six Negroes were convicted of traspassing on a publicly owned but privately leased golf course today.

Tues. 1-31-56

Municipal Court Judge William Poteat fined the Negroes $15 and court costs. J. Kenneth Lee, the defense attorney, filed notice of appeal to Guilford County Superior Court.

Mr. Lee said the case might eventually determine whether the Supreme Court ruling against segregated public parks could be sidestepped by leasing public lands.

New York

The Negroes were arrested after they had played nine holes of golf on the Gillespie Park course here despite protests from an assistant at the club that the coure was for member only.

It is common practice, however, for whites to play by paying a greens fee and not the stipulated $50 membership fee. The Negroes had put their greens fees on the counter.

Wilson Negroes Are Denied Admittance to Grandstand

News + Observer

Fri. 4-27-56

WILSON, April 26 (AP) — Dr. G. K. Butterfield, Negro member of the Wilson City Board of Commissioners, was reported today to have been denied admittance, along with several Negro friends, to the grandstand of city-owned Fleming Memorial Stadium where they appeared last night to attend a baseball game.

Raleigh, N.C.

All but one member of the group — the Rev. T. A. Watkins — was said to have had a season ticket, carrying no seating restrictions.

Paul Campbell, general manager of the Wilson Tobs of the Carolina League, declined comment today on the incident. He was called to the main gate of the stadium last night and conferred briefly with the group, after Watkins was refused a grandstand ticket for the Wilson-Kinston game.

Campbell declined to disclose the nature of his conversation with the Negroes, and Butterfield and Watkins, only identified members of the group, could not be reached immediately today for comment.

The stadium has no signs to distinguish white and Negro sections, but the grandstand traditionally is reserved to white patrons. Negroes are seated in a bleacher section.

Carroll Kemp, part time ticket salesman, told newsmen he refused to sell Watkins a grandstand ticket.

When the Negro minister asked why he could not purchase a grandstand ticket, Kemp said he replied that he was not permitted to sell him one.

Kemp said Watkins then rejoined the others and they went to the stadium's main gate, where they conferred with Campbell, and then left without entering the stadium.

Wilson City Manager N. Jack Maynard, asked if the city set stadium policy, replied that to the best of his knowledge this was left up to the lessee — in last night's case the Wilson ball club.

The Wilson club is owned by the Philadelphia Phillies, and is the only team in the Class B Carolina League owned outright by a major league club.

Bi-Racial Use of Recreation Area Discussed at C&D Meet

News + Observer Tues. 4-10-56

Raleigh, N.C.

By WOODROW PRICE.

ROCKY MOUNT, April 9—Two residents of the Dare resort area came before the Board of Conservation and Development's Parks Committee today to express "deep concern" over prospects for bi-racial use of the Cape Hatteras Seashore Recreation Area and the threat of competition with private enterprise in supplying facilities for visitors to the park.

Maj. J. L. Murphy of Kill Devil Hills and Mrs. Lucille Purser of Nags Head told the committee that mixing of races is certain to occur in the recreation area and that threats to private enterprise already have arisen. P.1

Asks Restatement.

"I think it's time," said Mrs. Purser, who operates a hotel at Nags Head, "for a restatement of the aims and program of the National Park Service in this area."

She and Major Murphy said the Park Service already has let a contract for facilities at a public use area on Bodie Island, at the upper end of the park, and has advertised for bids on three fishing piers opposite villages on Hatteras Island and another pier on Ocracoke Island.

They said that on Bodie Island commercial facilities already are available.

"There is nothing to prevent joint use of the facility if it is built by the Federal Government," Mrs. Purser said. "If it were done by private enterprise, we would have a saner and more sensible development."

She stressed that she was not opposed to the recreation area. "It would," she said, "be a wonderful thing if developed properly with due [illegible] of existing facilities and with respect to the traditions and customs of our region."

Major Murphy said he was certain that "we are going to have mixed races" and "these things of deep concern."

He said that "those of us who reside there are not going to be happy about a long string of Eastern North Carolina colored people or Virginia colored people using the boulevard in front of their homes. . . . It would result in a tremendous tax loss to the people of North Carolina."

News + Observer

Hugh Morton of Wilmington, chairman of the committee, advised that "I don't think we should get into a discussion of the segregation matter because I don't think we can settle that." P.3

However, he said, he knew what Major Murphy and Mrs. Purser meant when they talked about competition between the Park Service and free enterprise in providing facilities.

Major Murphy said the proposed piers and facilities appeared to him to violate promises made by the Park Service four years ago when plans for the recreation area were in the development stage. He said his first intimation of the Park Service's plans for fishing piers came from an advertisement carried in Wilmington papers but not in papers distributed in the Cape Hatteras vicinity.

He said that before leaving Dare County to come to Rocky Mount, he asked the director of the Advertising Bureau there to ascertain from the Park Service superintendent the status of the contemplated piers.

"He reported," said Major Murphy, "that he got a runaround."

Resolution Adopted.

The committee adopted a resolution, which will be presented to the full board Tuesday, calling on the National Park Service to "fully inform the director of Conservation and Development of its proposed plans for present and future development" of the seashore recreation area.

The resolution expressed concern over reports that the Park Service plans government-owned tourist facilities "contrary to those st forth" in 1952 and in apparent conflict with the policy of preserving the park area as "a primitive wilderness."

In another action, the committee adopted a resolution recommending to public utilities and other property owners using herbicides for killing weeds and trees "that discretion be used . . . so as not to mar the beauty of the country side."

Lawyer's Grit Irks Supreme Court Foes

WARRENTON, N.C.—"It was too good an opportunity to miss, so I told the committee that if it wanted to investigate anything they should investigate those people defying the Supreme Court."

Post. 3-24-56

"It was a bombshell," chuckled James D. Gilliland, attorney and county solicitor here.

"I wish you could have seen the expression on the face of the chairman of the committee," he added as he related his experiences at a congressional hearing in Charlotte.

* * *

MR. GILLILAND, whom diehard segregationists are now seeking to oust from his post as solicitor, was counsel for some defendants at the Charlotte hearing who were charged with being alleged Communists.

"I am not at all sure that I have defended any Communists," Mr. Gilliland declared, adding that "Every man has his right to employ counsel."

He added that his client, John D. Myers, former professor at Campbell College, sought counsel and was refused by nine different lawyers who wouldn't take the case because it was "unpopular to do so."

* *

HE SAID he was a college mate of Myers at Wake Forest College and after Mr. Myers explained the predicament in which he found himself, he agreed to take the case.

Mr. Gilliland pointed out that he happened to have a Charlotte newspaper in his hand when he appeared at the hearing.

The paper carried one headline announcing the scheduled hearing, he said, and another telling of the signing of the so-called "manifesto" and declaration of state's rights attacking the Supreme Court.

Thus was set up his "opportunity" that was "too good to miss." He was back at his desk last week perturbed not one bit by the tempest he had created in his home town.

* * *

MR. GILLILAND was indignant at the committee's procedure. He said it not only refused to permit him to cross-examine witnesses but put a microphone on his desk so the chairman could eaves-drop his conversations with his client.

"As for my conduct," Mr. Gilliland declared, "I feel that I have time on my side. As for the reaction you know that I have never sought to enter any popularity contest.

No. Carolina Dumps Foes Of 'Manifesto'

Wash. Post & Times News

Sat. 6-2-56

Washington, D.C.

North Carolina Democrats dumped two of the state's three congressmen who refused to sign the so-called "Southern manifesto" denouncing the Supreme Court desegregation decision. P.2

In Wisconsin, the GOP organization maintained its right-wing character by refusing endorsement to the veteran Sen. Alexander Wiley, running for renomination as an "Eisenhower Republican."

In Kentucky, in a reversal of the trend, Gov. A. B. (Happy) Chandler's effort to defeat Sen. Earle C. Clements in the Democratic primary failed.

Clements rolled up nearly a two-to-one margin over former Rep. Joe B. Bates, the Chandler-backed candidate. He will face Republican Thurston Morton, a one-time member of the House of Representatives and a White House-supported candidate, in the November election.

The Democratic state committee, controlled by anti-Chandler elements, will pick a nominee for the second Senate seat vacated by the death of Sen. Alben W. Barkley. Chandler can appoint an interim senator to serve until November.

Incumbent congressmen who lost primary fights in North Carolina were Rep. Thurmond Chatham and Rep. C. B. Deane.

Beaten on Segregation

Chatham, whose family-owned blanket mill has long been a stronghold of anti-unionism, was beaten strictly on the segregation issue. A conservative, he pointblank refused to join in assailing the court and declined to attack it during his campaign.

Deane also refused to attack the court. Chatham lost to Ralph J. Scott, Deane was beaten by A. Paul Kitchin. Scott and Kitchin raised the segregation issue constantly.

A third congressman who had declined to sign the "manifesto," Rep. Harold Cooley, won renomination after a hard fight against a court-assailing challenger.

The Wisconsin GOP State Convention, long under control of Thomas Coleman and other bitter-end supporters of the late Sen. Taft, turned thumbs down on Wiley and endorsed Rep. Glenn R. Davis, considered vastly more conservative, for the senatorial nomination.

Sen. Wiley Booed

Wiley, now completing his third six-year Senate term, was booed and denounced from the floor as he defended his record in supporting foreign aid and supporting Pres. Eisenhower by voting in 1953 against the proposed Bricker constitutional amendment.

Davis claims to be an Eisenhower supporter on domestic issues. Across his years in the House he has voted consistently against bills favored by labor and for bills opposed by labor.

The Republican primary Sept. 11 will determine whether Wiley or Davis is the party's nominee. A third aspirant, Mark Catlin, Jr., speaker of the State Assembly and author of the notorious Catlin law seeking to prohibit union political activity, apparently lost his chance when he was denied convention endorsement.

Lawyer fined $500 for justice fiaht

(Special To The AFRO)

JACKSON, N.C. — Originally charged with a misdemeanor (petty crime), James R. Walker Jr., Statesville attorney, was convicted of a felony and fined $500 and court costs here Wednesday afternoon.

Mr. Walker, represented by Samuel S. Mitchell of Raleigh at the trial in Northampton County Superior Court, noted an appeal to the State Supreme Court and posted $300 bond.

The case is the outgrowth of efforts on the part of Mr. Walker to have two of his clients registered by Mrs. Helen H. Taylor, white, at Seaboard last May 12 for the primary election.

TRIED originally on a charge of "trespassing and disorderly conduct," noting an appeal from the recorders court conviction, that charge was not pressed by Solicitor Ernest L. Tyler of Roxobel in Superior Court.

Instead, between the time of the trial in recorders court and the Superior Court trial, the state had brought a more serious charge to face the young attorney, that of "assault on a female."

Mr. Walker told reporters he did not know of the change in the nature of the case until he was finally called for trial Tuesday morning. He then gained a delay until his attorney arrived and had time to restudy the case.

JUDGE HENRY L. STEVENS of Warsaw, who was presiding, had previously charged the twelve jurymen, among whom were two colored men.

Solicitor Tyler had excused one colored juryman because he had paid a $1 membership in the NAACP (which name Mr. Tyler never did pronounce correctly) eight years ago.

Although the man maintained that he had paid nothing since, Mr. Tyler insisted, "You are still a member; you just haven't paid your dues," so he disqualified the man.

MR. MITCHELL challenged four white jurymen, one of whom caused Judge Stevens to warn the jury that "This case is no different from any other case; you are to try it only on the basis of the evidence given here and not on what you may have heard or read."

Mrs. Taylor's testimony, in substance, was that Mr. Walker entered the front portion of her husband's store where she was working as registrar while she was "examining" Mark Johnson, who was seeking to register.

Two other persons who had been turned down earlier were with Mr. Walker when he sought the reason for their disqualification by Mrs. Taylor. Mr. Walker said they could read and Mrs. Taylor said they could not.

* * *

MRS. TAYLOR charged that Mr. Walker shook his finger as he pointed across the desk toward her as she ordered him out and he refused to go until her husband came from the rear and reached in a desk drawer for a telephone book to call police.

Mr. Mitchell, who was congratulated by Judge Stevens on his handling of the case had been laboring under grief caused by the death of his father, Samuel J. Mitchell of Goldsboro, ~~Tuesday night.~~

Five Negro Baseball Fans Sue City Over Park Seats

WILSON, N.C., Sept. 13 (AP) —A suit asking an end to racial segregation at the Wilson Municipal Stadium, leased for professional baseball and used for various other activities, was on file here today.

Five Wilson Negroes brought the suit in U.S. district court. They said they tried to enter the grandstand for a baseball game and were turned away, although they had season tickets. They said the only seating offered Negroes was a bleacher section accommodating about 50.

The plaintiffs are the Rev. T. A. Watkins, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church; I. B. Butler, O. N. Ellis, James Hart and Helen Ford.

Dr. G. K. Butterfield, Negro member of the city board of commissioners, was among the group refused admittance to the grandstand last April 25. He is not a party to the suit, however.

The defendants are the City of Wilson, Mayor John D. Wilson, and City Manager N. Jack Maynard.

C. O. Pearson, Durham Negro lawyer who has argued several cases in which the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has been interested, represents the plaintiffs.

The city stadium is leased during baseball season by the Wilson Tobs, an affiliate of the Philadelphia Phillies, in the Class B Carolina League. Some Carolina League teams have Negro players. Wilson does not.

The plaintiffs said they went to the city commissioners May 10 and asked that segregation be stopped. The board refused to do it.

As a result of this refusal, the suit stated, the plaintiffs are asking an injunction against segregated seating and a final decree setting forth the legal rights of the five Negroes "and the class of people they represent."

The Wilson stadium also is used as a public school playground, for American Legion junior baseball, by the City Recreation Department, and for other purposes.

Open a can of tomato juice in the morning. Add a slice of onion, a few peppercorns, a few celery leaves and some strips of green pepper to it. Chill and allow the flavors to blend. Serve for dinner that night with crisp crackers.

The Communists want to mongrelize the race—weaken and conquer; and the Jews, they're so clannish, they want it so they'll end up being the only pure white race left, and have it all over everybody.

*** * ***

You know, we've got a lot of carpetbaggers down here in Virginia—rich Yankees come down here to settle, and they're more segregationist than we are. What makes us mad is you Northerners up there with dirty hands coming down here to tell us what to do. I've been to New York many a time and I never see a nigger couple in a restaurant there —they're all segregated out in Harlem.

"All those organizations that are so worried about minorities, why is it just the nigras? What about the Chinks and Japs over the West Coast, and the Italians and Irishmen over in the East? Why not worry over them for a while? Why, we do more for the niggers down here than all the liberal organiaztions put together. So happens I got a nigger in my will, and I bet there's not many white men up North can say that.

*** * ***

"We don't want any trouble down here, but boy, you haven't seen trouble compared to what there'll be if integration starts. Economically, the nigger'll be outa jobs. There's plenty of poor whites need work. These niggers'll be outa work and we'll give 'em a little pocket money and a railroad ticket and send 'em up there where you people love 'em so much. I've heard a good deal of talk about just that — there's a lot of people willing to give money for that."

Salibsury, N. C. -- (ANP)-- Rather than partake of both segregation and bad service, all but about three or four of the 30 Negro leaders in the Rowan United Fund Drive walked out of an opening dinner meeting here before it got started.

The Negro group had been seated by itself at table near the entrance to the kitchen. Some members walked out because they were served after white groups had arrived later. E. P. The meeting was in connection with Community Chest campaigns.

Wilson Negroes File Suit On Ball Park Segregation

News & Observer p. 1
Fri. 9-14-56

WILSON, Sept. 13—A suit has been filed in the United States District Federal Court here by five Negroes against the City of Wilson asking that segregation be struck down in the Municipal Stadium of Wilson.

The Negroes, in the suit filed yesterday, charge they were denied seats in the grandstand last April 25 for a Class B Carolina League baseball game between the Wilson Tobs and the Kinston club, although all had season tickets.

Defendants in the suit include the City of Wilson, Mayor John D. Wilson and City Manager N. Jack Maynard. The plaintiffs are the Rev. T. A. Watkins, pastor of the Negro First Baptist Church, I. B. Butler, O. M. Ellis, James Hart and Helen Ford.

Dr. G. K. Butterfield, Wilson's only Negro lawmaker, was in the group when it reportedly was refused admission to the grandstand. However, he is not a plaintiff in the action.

Wants Policy Change.

On May 10, the suit alleges, the five Negroes appealed to the City Board of Commissioners to change the seating policy in the grandstand, but that this appeal was not granted.

The complaint was signed and notorized Sept. 10, and was filed with the District Clerk of Court Sept. 12. Representing the plaintiffs is C. O. Pearson, a Negro attorney who has argued many cases for the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Also, the complaint alleges, the city maintains a grandstand and covered bleacher section for its white patrons, while only limited accommodations of 50 seats are provided for Negro patrons. The action also says that seating arrangements are based on races.

The suit asks the court to enter a preliminary injunction and/or permanent injunction restraining and enjoining the city from the policy of segregation.

Another Charge.

In another charge against the city, the defendants alleged that the City of Wilson will continue to maintain and apply the policy of segregation at the stadium and they ask the court to restrain the municipality from doing so.

After the case has been heard on its merits, the suit says, the plaintiffs ask the court to enter a final judgment or decree that will set forth the legal rights of the plaintiffs and "the class of people they represent."

Wilson's stadium is leased on a year-to-year basis to the Wilson Tobs, an affiliate of the Philadelphia Phillies. The renewal of the lease for next season has not come up for discussion.

Paul Campbell, General Manager of the Tobs revealed that his organization will ask for a renewal of the current lease "as soon as the World Series is over." He said the suit against the city will have no effect on the club's plans to continue operating here.

Hodges Thinks Integration Crisis Poor Campaign Issue

News & Observer P.1 Wed. 3-28-56
Raleigh, N.C.

DURHAM, March 27 (AP)—Gov. Hodges declared tonight the U. S. Supreme Court "has not required any state to take any affirmative action toward mixing the races" in public schools.

He also told the Durham United Political Education Committee, a pro-segregation body, "I do not believe that segregation versus integration is much of an issue" for political candidates.

In his prepared speech, the Governor said that in the upcoming primaries "there are apt to be many candidates attempting to make an issue of the segregation problem. This problem is the most important one facing our state and of course it must be discussed by every candidate.

"However, I do not believe that segregation verus integration is much of an issue."

The governor explained that "to have an important issue, there would have to be a substantial amount of disagreement among a substantial number of our people as to how we feel about mixed schools.

It is my opinion that in North Carolina there is not a great deal of disagreement as to how we feel about mixing the races."

Hodges declared "There may well be some difference of opinion as how best to accomplish to attend any school that it maintains.'"

The Governor said "Because the various Southern states disagree with the decision of the supreme court doesn't mean they are disobeying a law.

"In Alabama where its legislature passed a resolution declaring the Supreme Court's decision null and void, a Negro woman was admitted to the University of Alabama as soon as the Federal Court ordered her admission.

"True it is that she is not now there," he continued, "but this did not result from defiance of the court decree. It expelled her as it had a right to do. Alabama obeyed the court decree, notwithstanding the language of its legislature."

He declared "We do not intend to go out of our way to do something we do not want to do in order to carry out somebody's mistaken notions of what is best for us. Not only do we not intend to go out of our way to do this, we do intend to go out of our way in every lawful manner, and I emphasize the word lawful, to avoid doing that which our people do not want to do and do not believe is best."

The Governor reported that the report of the advisory committee on education will be released in a few days.

our goals, but generally speaking, and with a few exceptions, most of us feel substantially the same way on this subject."

The governor asserted "I have tried on countless occasions . . . to make clear that the Supreme Court has not required any state to take affirmative action toward mixing the races. As Judge John J. Parker of the United States Court of Appeals has said: 'What the court has decided, and all that it has decided, is that a state may not deny to any person on account of race the right

It endorsed the 1955 legislation which called for pupil assignment on the basis of color. On the question of the legality of this position, the committee said that:

"AN ADMINISTRATIVE body may well find that under existing local conditions it may not be feasible or best for a particular child to go to a particular school with children of another race."

It interpreted the Supreme Court ruling by saying:

"A color ban by law is one thing. A factual local-condition bar, even if color is one of the causes of the condition, is a different thing."

* * *

THE COMMITTEE hopes that "An understanding and tolerant court may well recognize that difference."

It suggested a "safety valve" in case its reasoning on assignment was not shared by "an understanding and tolerant court."

This "safety valve" would be legislation enabling a community to vote the discontinuance of its schools, thereby bypassing the constitutional provision for public schools, and,

WILSON, N. C.—A Negro City Commissioner, Dr. G. K. Butterfield, was denied a seat in the grandstand of the municipal stadium last Saturday, despite the fact that he had a season baseball ticket which carried no seating restrictions.

All of the members of the party had season tickets except the Rev. T. A. Watkins, and he was refused a grandstand ticket by a ticketseller. Then all of the Negroes were denied admittance to the grandstand and left the stadium.

N. J. Baynard, Wilson city manager, said that seating policy was left in the hands of the person or group which leases the stadium. In this case it was the Wilson Tobs ball club, owned by the Philadelphia Phillies.

THE GENERAL manager of the Wilson ball club, Paul Campbell, was aware of the incident, but apparently refused to let the Negroes take seats anywhere but in the bleachers.

No signs appear in the stadium to designate special seating areas, but "tradition" is for Negroes to sit in the bleachers, while whites sit in the grandstand.

The game was played between Wilson and Kinston, both in the Class B Carolina League.

WILSON, N. C.--(ANP)--A party of five Negroes--one of them a Wilson city commissioner--was denied admittance to the grandstand of city-owned baseball park here last Thursday night because of their race.

Dr. G. K. Butterfield, now serving his second term as a member of the city commission, arrived at the park prior to the game between Wilson and Kinston with four other men. All had season tickets except the Rev. T. A. Watkins, a Wilson minister.

Carroll Kemp, part-time ticket salesman, said Watkins asked to buy a ticket to the grandstand and "I told him I could not sell him a grandstand ticket." He said Watkins asked him why and that he told him that "I was not allowed to sell him a grandstand ticket."

Kemp said he referred Watkins to Gate 3, an entrance to a bleacher section which by custom is used by Negroes.

The stadium has no signs to distinguish white and Negro sections, but the grandstand traditionally is reserved to white patrons.

The Negroes left the park after conferring with Paul Campbell, general manager of the Wilson club.

Voters Still Like Cooley Despite Manifesto Issue

By DAVID KOONCE
Star Staff Correspondent

RALEIGH, N. C.—If the 4th congressional district of North Carolina is at all typical of this region, civil rights is by no means the only issue the Southern voter will consider when he goes to the polls this year.

In this District, Representative Harold D. Cooley, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee and a member of Congress for 22 years, is facing stiff primary opposition based almost solely on his refusal to join 79 other Dixie Congressmen in signing the "Southern Manifesto" attacking the Supreme Court's segregation decision. Victory in the Democratic primary on Saturday is tantamount to election in the fourth district.

W. E. Debnam, Mr. Cooley's opponent, is taking an appeal to the voters of this predominately rural area that is an old and familiar litany to the Southerner. Mr. Debnam charges that Mr. Cooley is being backed by the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. He implies that the veteran Congressman refused to sign the manifesto because he is for integration in the public schools.

Mr. Cooley has explained that, as a lawyer, he could not "in good conscience" put his name on the document. This was the position taken by most of the other 25 House members from the South who refused to sign.

Virulent Issue in Past

The list of Southern politicians who have been felled by the race issue in the past is a long one—Claude Pepper, Frank Graham, Hugo Sims and Sidney McMath, to mention a few recent ones.

But Mr. Cooley's constituents, even those with the reddest necks and the poorest land, apparently are not convinced that their Congressman, one of the most faithful of the many farm champions in Congress, is ready to desert his "Southern heritage."

What appears at this point in the campaign to be the predominant feeling was summed up by the owner of a farm tool business, Roy E. Medlin of Benson: "If there's any farmer that will vote against Harold Cooley, he ought to have his brain looked at."

Mr. Medlin said that concern over Mr. Cooley's failure to sign the manifesto was slight. This opinion also was expressed by W. D. Tyson of Wendell, who, speaking of the State generally, said he believed that only a minority considers civil rights and integration the only big issue this year. "Most folks," he said, "are not blaming the responsible Southern politicians for this integration business. They blame fanatic Northerners."

A Johnston County farmer said that Mr. Cooley has "done more for the farmer than any 20 others up there." He added that "Cooley, Roosevelt and Truman have been the best friends the farmer has had." A farmer from Zebulon, in Raleigh on a shopping visit, said Mr. Cooley had always "taken care of us, and it don't matter how he figures this race business, I'd still vote for him."

Bill Byrd, a tobacco farmer, said he was getting fed up with race talk. "What I'm worried about" he said, "is my (acreage) allotment. I don't see how I'm going to make it this year with no more than I got."

Voter Backs 'Fiasco'

Strong Debnam sentiment in the district ... difficult to find. Much of his support seems to come from those who have not received all that they might have from North Carolina's public school system, which is far ahead of that in most other Southern States. A Debnam supporter, for instance, explained his preference this way: "Cooley has got too yankeefied and citvfied and I wouldn't vote for no man who didn't sign that fiasco."

Rep. Harold D. Cooley
Farmers Like Him

In the earlier days of the campaign. Mr. Debnam made much of the "manifesto" issue, but informed opinion now holds that this appeal, after the first passionate discussions around it, no longer has much impact. Apparently, Mr. Debnam now realizes this, for he has turned to attacking Mr. Cooley on the farm issue, charging that the Congressman has "played politics with the livelihood of farmers and lost."

A few weeks ago, Mr. Cooley himself was worried about the prospects. While his opponent was lashing him to the yardarm back home, he was held in Washington, putting in 12-hour days on the farm bill.

Last week was the first time he had had an opportunity for any strenuous campaigning. But his first few days in the district seemed to be paying off. His campaign workers even reported that they had received apologetic phone calls from persons who, over the checkerboard and on street corner discussions, had criticized Mr. Cooley.

The only trouble spot remaining for him seems to be Raleigh, the only city in the district. It is here that Debnam strength is the greatest.

Had Rural Following

Mr. Debnam, whom one editor labeled "a poor man's Fulton Lewis," was for years a radio news commentator who became a favorite with farmers. His sponsor was a large fertilizer manufacturing company. Many rural folk swore by him. In his campaign he has used this medium that is so familiar to him. His radio campaign talks, on purchased time, are presented in newscast format and many of his listeners do not realize that these are any different from the "Debnam Views the News" programs of the past.

Practically every newspaper in the district is supporting Mr. Cooley.

One editor said the Congressman "looks like a sure winner at this point." But he added that anything could happen on the last day of the campaign. "They (Debnam) might bring out something at the last minute that would not give Cooley time enough to answer."

Two other Representatives in the North Carolina primary next Saturday, Thurmond Chatham and Charles B. Deane, also are facing opponents who made their failure to sign the manifesto a campaign issue. If they—and Mr. Cooley—are returned to Congress their victories may well serve as a warning to Southern candidates who are depending on the race issue this year. It now seems a fact that it is becoming more and more difficult to get elected in the South by doing nothing more than waving a bloody shirt and appealing to race passions.

Five men arrested—

Spreading race hate accused after raids

CHARLOTTE, N. C., June 1—(AP)—Five men were under arrest today on charges of spreading race hate literature.

Police said that in searching the homes and business establishments of the men yesterday they found unsigned literature attacking the Anti-Defamation League and the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People.

They also said they found application blanks for membership in the Ku Klux Klan, a Klan robe and mask, a printing press, dynamite, guns, a roster of members of the States' Rights League, nude photographs, and printing plates of pornographic comic drawings.

THE FIVE, all from Charlotte and suburbs, are charged with distributing and mailing pamphlets attacking Alfred E. Smith, president of the Charlotte branch of the ADL, an arm of the B'nai B'rith Jewish order.

The charges are brought under a state law making it a misdemeanor to mail or transmit threatening written or printed material which is not signed.

Police seized leaflets saying that the Anti-Defamation League is "the American-Jewish gestapo of secret police and an offspring of B'nai B'rith, a so-called brotherhood of Jews."

THE LEAFLETS go on to say that the ADL "intimidated and coerced" the Charlotte city council to pass an ordinance banning "that they called hate literature."

Bond of $1000 each was set for release of the men.

Police said pamphlets also were found deriding the NAACP as "the National Assn. for the Agitation of Colored People."

Attorney Fined For Talking Loud To Woman

JACKSON, N. C. — (ANP) — A Negro attorney has given notice that he will appeal the $100 fine and 90 day suspended sentence given him last wek for "talking loud" to a white woman registrar at a polling place at Seaboard.

Atty James R. Walker, Jr., who appeared before Judge Mallard Gay in Recorder's Court last Wednesday was convicted of forcible transpass and disorderly conduct growing out of the incident.

Mrs. W. H. Taylor, register at Seaboard, told the court that Walker caused a disturbance by loud and boisterous talking while she was registering a Negro voter. She testified that Walker demanded that she register that Walker demanded that she registeh two men and two women who accompanied him to the polling place.

Following Mrs. Taylor's testimony, Samuel S. Mitchell, Raleigh Negro attorney who defended Walker, asked Judge Gay to dismiss the charges. He contended he knew he knew of no state law that makes it a crime to talk long and loud.

Cooley Explains Manifesto Stand

Raleigh, N.C.

WASHINGTON, March 13 (AP) — Rep. Cooley (D-NC) declared today he refrained from signing the Southern manifesto against racial integration because he considers it "a dangerous document, calculated to aggravate the situation."

Cooley explained in a statement why he did not join 101 other Southern Congress members in the manifesto, called a "Declaration of Constitutional Principles," presented to Congress yesterday.

The declaration denounces the Supreme Court's decision outlawing racial segregation in public schools and pledges the signers to exert all lawful means in opposing the decision.

Another reason he did not sign the document Cooley said, is that he believes it "holds out the false hope that there are legal means through which the Supreme Court decision can and may be reversed."

He added that he is "and always have been definitely and positively in favor of our present system of segregated schools."

Cooley is the head of the North Carolina delegation in Congress.

"I did not sign the manifesto or Declaration of Constitutional Principles," his statement said, "for the very good reason that I believe it to be a dangerous document, calculated to aggravate the situation and inflame the minds and intensify the feelings of many people in many parts of our country."

Cooley continued:

"Some of the rather extreme statements contained in the so-called manifesto or Declaration of Constitutional Principles which was recently circulated in Washington will, in my opinion, greatly hinder rather than help those who are sincerely and earnestly trying to solve the problems presented by the Supreme Court Decision.

". . . Actually, some of the distinguished signers of the so-called manifesto have frankly and correctly indicated that any lasting solutions of the problems which now perplex us must of necessity be found at the local level, meaning, of course, within the sovereignty of the several states. We have the best system of government the mind of mortal man has yet devised. It is, indeed, a government of checks and balances. It is a dual, complext system of sovereignty, a government of three separate and distinct branches at the federal level and in the several states. Each branch functions within the framework of constitutional limitations and every official of each branch of the government is charged with certain fixed and definite responsibilities.

". . . Neither as a member of Congress nor as a lawyer do I know of any way to reverse the unanimous decision of the Supreme Court of the United States, nor do any of the distinguished authors of the manifesto even suggest or offer a remedy by which the decision of the highest court of the land may be reversed.

"I did not prepare, circulate, or sign the so-called Declaration of Constitutional Principles for another good and valid reason, and that is that it holds out the false hope that there are legal means through which the Supreme Court decision can and may be reversed, and for the further good reason that I did not approve of either the form or substance of the document.

"I fervently hope that in an atmosphere of tolerance and understanding, and with patience and becoming dignity, our people will meet and solve the problems which now disturb the hearts and minds of citizens everywhere.

"I am now and always have been definitely and positively in favor of our present system of segregated schools. I am certain that the thinking people of both races appreciate fully the mutual advantages of our present segregated school system and I believe they will try honestly and sincerely to solve all of the problems presented."

Two Dixie Solons Oppose Manifesto

Wed. 3-14-56 Atlanta, Ga.

BY WILLIAM KERWIN

WASHINGTON — (INS) — Two Southern Congressmen — one of them an influential House Committee chairman — disavowed Tuesday the manifesto against racial integration in the schools issued by 101 of their Dixie Colleagues.

Reps. Harold D. Cooley (D) N. C., and Thurmond Chatham (D) N. C., both sharply questioned the wisdom of the declaration by the Southerners that they would employ all "lawful methods" to upset the Supreme Court ruling.

Cooley, who heads the powerful House Agriculture Committee, termed the manifesto "a dangerous document" and said it will "greatly hinder" those seeking a solution to problems created by the court order that racial segregation is unconstitutional.

Chatham said he considers the Supreme Court decision the law of the land, and therefore could not oppose it.

Cooley affirmed his advocacy of segregated schools but said that some of "the rather extreme statements" contained in the manifesto will hurt the South's position.

He said: "I did not sign the manifesto or declaration of constitutional principles for the very good reason that I believe it to be a dangerous document, calculated to aggravate the situation and inflame the minds and intensify the feelings of many people in many parts of our country."

The chairman stated also that the manifesto is "calculated to bring all the courts of our country into disrepute."

Hennings said he has asked for immediate consideration of the bills pieE tc::

Sen. Paul Douglas (D) Ill., warned the manifesto will encourage "resistance" to the Supreme Court ruling.

Congressman Cooley Talks Sense

Norfolk, Va.

From (Raleigh) News and Observer

IN a statement explaining his reason for not signing the "manifesto" of 100 Southern members of Congress denouncing the Supreme Court's school segregation decision, Representative Harold D. Cooley talks sense.

Mr. Cooley not only talks sense, but throws some needed light on the effects of the "manifesto."

On the basis of 22 years in Congress and 39 years as a lawyer, Mr. Cooley declares that he knows of no way of reversing the Supreme Court decision. He said that talk of reversing the decision will only stir up false hopes and false beliefs in the South and create antagonism in other sections of the country.

Mr. Cooley makes another very practical point. He sees no point in raising the question at the national level, when the signers of the document claim that the solution must be sought at the local and state level and admit that they are in a hopeless minority in the Congress.

Mr. Cooley's predictions were coming true even while he was making them. Already the "manifesto" has been responsible for more open cleavage in Democratic ranks than has been shown in three years. So far the only beneficiaries of the document have been the Republicans, who are understandably gleeful over Democratic disunity. And the chief victims may be the signers themselves, who have created resentment because they hold most of the important chairmanships in Congress although they constitute a decided minority of the Democrats in Congress.

Negro Group Is Studying Public Park Segregation

News + Observer Sat. 4-7-56

Raleigh, N.C.

The Raleigh Citizens Association, which has been insisting that local schools be integrated immediately, is considering an attack on another segregated front — Raleigh's public parks.

P. 16 -

Chairman G. A. Fisher of the local Negro organization said yesterday that the subject of segregated parks will be on the agenda for a meeting next Tuesday at 6:30 p.m. at the Bloodworth Street YMCA. He said that he did not know what action would be taken, that "we will have to study the city ordinances first."

The city operates two amusement parks—Pullen in west Raleigh for whites, and Chavis in southeast Raleigh for Negroes.

City Manager W. H. Carper said there is no ordinance regarding segregation in parks here. He also said their operation is controlled by the City Charter which does not require operation of such amusement centers as Pullen and Chavis parks.

The city manager also stated that, "no tax money is used for programming, supervision, etc.," at those parks for recreation. If the swimming pools, rides, and other amusement features were not self-supporting, he said, no tax money could be used to operate them.

Tax money can and is used, he said, for maintenance of the parks—such as upkeep of buildings, mowing grass, etc. Tax money also is used, it was stated, to retire $250,000 worth of bonds approved by voters in 1951 for the development of new parks and existing ones here.

Approximately $75,000 of the bond money was allocated for Chavis Park, it was reported, where a grandstand has since been built and the balance of the sum left "available to purchase a site in the eastern part of the city" for another park for Negroes.

Recreation Director James M. Chambers said that Chavis Park actually has better facilities now than those at Pullen Park.

Public parks and recreation facilities supported by tax funds recently were put in the same position as public schools on integration by a recent Supreme Court ruling.

Concession rights at Pullen Park have been awarded by the City Council to the Capital Concession Company on a high bid of $5,002. The company has operated at Pullen Park for several years, but the contract this year contains a cancellation clause in case any integration trouble arises to reduce income or the parks are closed. They are scheduled to start summer operations next month.

RACE ISSUE HELPS DEFEAT 2 IN HOUSE

Times P. 16-C

Cooley Only North Carolina Primary Winner of 3 Who Did Not Sign Manifesto

Mon. 5-28-56

New York, N.Y.

Special to The New York Times.

RALEIGH, N. C., May 27—Representative Harold D. Cooley was the only one of three Representatives in Congress who did not sign the Southern Manifesto to survive in yesterday's Democratic primary in North Carolina. Mr. Cooley, chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, has served in Congress twenty-two years.

Representatives Thurmond Chatham and Charles B. Deane, the other non-signers of the manifesto, both were defeated in contests in which the manifesto had been the main issue. That document was signed in March by 101 Southern members of Congress. It pledged them to use all possible lawful means to resist the Supreme Court's decision outlawing segregation in public schools.

However, observers looking for signs of hardening of attitudes on the race issue in North Carolina, could see mixed trends in the moderately heavy primary voting.

F. Ertel Carlyle, Seventh District Representative since 1948, was unseated in a race in which the manifesto was not an issue. He was beaten by former United States Senator Alton A. Lennon.

Representative Chatham of the Fifth District lost to Ralph J. Scott of Danbury, Superior Court solicitor. While the manifesto became the principal issue in this contest it had been generally agreed even before the emergence of that paper that Mr. Chatham was facing trouble.

The contest in the Eighth District, which Representative Deane lost to A. Paul Kitchin, a lawyer from Wadesboro, had been regarded as a true test of the race issue. That was so because Mr. Deane had declined to backtrack on his refusal to sign the manifesto. This became the sole issue used against him.

Nor was the victory of Mr. Cooley an outright test of the race issue. Repeatedly during the campaign he expressed his opposition to integration. He easily defeated W. E. Debnam, a news commentator from Raleigh. Mr. Colley's chairmanship of the Agriculture Committee brought him support from farmers in his predominantly agricultural district.

On the other hand, voting in other contests strongly indicated that North Carolinians favored moderation on the issue. Gov. Luther Hodges piled up a record-breaking vote against three opponents, two of whom had challenged him on the race issue.

With more than 250 voting precincts still unreported, Mr. Hodges had 369,000 votes against a combined total of 62,000 for his opponents. It appeared that the Governor's total would approach 400,000 votes, about 88,000 more than any other candidate had ever received in a state Democratic primary.

The only other contest in which the race question became an issue was the one for Lieutenant Governor. State Senator J. Vivian Whitfield came in last. He had been the only candidate to advocate the closing of the schools if necessary to avoid integration. Luther Barnhardt, Senate President, who had led that contest, did not speak out on the segregation question.

In other races of consequence, Senator Sam J. Ervin Jr. was renominated for a six-year term in the United States Senate by a one-sided margin over Marshall Kurfees, Mayor of Winston-Salem. Ralph Gardner of Shelby, son of the late Gov. O. Max Gardner, led in a three-man race for Representative in the Eleventh District. A second primary appeared likely in this campaign for the seat being given up by Representative Woodrow Jones.

Of six Representatives involved in primary contests Messrs. Cooley, Carl T. Durham and Graham A. Barden won, all by good margins. Mr. Durham is vice chairman of the Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy. Mr. Barden is chairman of the House Education and Labor Committee.

Kentucky Pupils Attacked In Cincinnati by Negroes

Courier-Journal
Louisville, Ky.

Franklin, Fayette Students Visiting Zoo Robbed, Intimidated by Bands of Youths

By HUGH MORRIS

The Courier-Journal Frankfort Bureau

Frankfort, Ky., May 18.—Two groups of Central Kentucky white school children from Franklin and Fayette counties were attacked, robbed, and intimidated by bands of Negro youths at Cincinnati's Zoological Gardens yesterday.

School officials of the two counties said today they will lodge formal protests about the trouble with the Mayor of Cincinnati, the Chamber of Commerce there, and Cincinnati Zoo officials.

J. F. Heusser, executive director of the zoo, said the Negro youths were pupils from Avondale School, which is near the widely known zoological gardens.

90 Pupils Molested

Molested were some 90 pupils of eight-grade classes at Elkhorn school, near Frankfort, and some of the 350 pupils from the ninth grades at Lafayette Junior High School, near Lexington.

No serious injuries were reported.

Charles Hart, superintendent of Franklin County schools, said one Elkhorn youth reported his glasses were taken from him by a band of Negro boys of high-school age, another was struck severely in the face, and a third came home with a shirt slashed by a razor.

"A number of Elkhorn pupils said they were chased by the colored boys and were intimidated," Hart said. "Another group said they were surrounded by colored boys with knives who took their money from them."

Says One Youth Struck

Luther C. Jones, principal of Lafayette Junior High, said at Lexington some members of his group reported Negro youths forced them to give up their lunches and their money.

One Lexington youth was struck by a Negro youth when he refused a demand for his money, Jones said, and another Lexington youth engaged in a fist fight with another Negro youth. Neither was injured, he added.

The Kentucky school officials said they did not regard the trouble as being race-inspired, but merely the unruly actions of "an unsupervised group of hoodlums."

Principal Jones said teachers chaperoning his pupils reported the students were conducting themselves in an orderly manner when several were attacked by the Negroes.

Say Officials Indifferent

"If there were chaperons for the group causing the disturbance it was not evident and certainly nothing was done to restore order," Jones said his teachers reported.

Teachers in charge of both Lexington and Frankfort groups said that uniformed officials of the zoo were inefficient and seemed indifferent to the disorders.

Pupils from Bridgeport School in Franklin County were visiting in Cincinnati today, but were instructed by Superintendent Hart not to stop at the zoo.

Zoo Director Heusser said, "I heard about it, but I don't know what took place," when asked at Cincinnati today about the troubles.

Received Call

Heusser said he received a call on the zoo intercommunication system yesterday from ticket takers at the automobile gate. They told him there was trouble around one of the buses in the parking area.

"I called the Cincinnati police right away and they came immediately," Heusser said, "but the trouble was all over when they arrived."

Heusser said the attacks occurred in an "isolated area" and that he had not yet been able to find anyone who could give him a report about it.

"Some people told me it was nothing, and others said it was pretty bad," he continued.

'Regret It Happened'

"If I could identify who was attacked by whom it would help. We regret that it happened because it all reflects against the zoo and we have a lot of friends in Kentucky and wouldn't want anything to happen to this friendship."

Heusser said yesterday was a "tough" day at the zoo because of the many children present. He said he was surprised at the number of Negro children in the Avondale School group.

"I don't think I ever saw them so big—and still in school," he added.

Heusser said he would ask the principals of Elkhorn and Lafayette Junior High for reports on the incidents.

The zoo director said the skirmish might have started because one group or the other was belligerent, or because one resented the presence of the other.

The Zoological Garden is operated for the City of Cincinnati by a society, Heusser explained. It has two uniformed guards in the area of the rides and attractions and two other guards on patrol.

Ronald Connelly, principal at Elkhorn School, said his eighth-grade group was chaperoned by Coach Allen Parr, three women teachers, and a bus driver.

Principal Jones said his Lexington pupils were supervised by 12 teachers and nine bus drivers. His faculty outlined the incidents to him in a written report today.

Jones commended his faculty and the bus drivers "for doing all they could to restore normal order."

Ohio high court upholds park that refused Negro

COLUMBUS, Ohio, April 18—(AP)—Ohio's Supreme Court today refused to order Coney Island Amusement Park near Cincinnati to admit a Negro woman.

The 5-2 decision came in a mandamus action by Mrs. Ethel Fletcher who said the park denied her admission on July 2 and 4, 1954.

The court said that the operator of a private place of amusement for entertainment has a right to admit or to bar, under law, anyone he chooses, but is subject to fine and imprisonment for violating anyone's civil liberties.

[The origin of this one is worth mention. From the three corners of the country we are receiving friendly letters and steers on race strife outside the South. Among these was an unsigned envelope from New York and in it, a clipping from the theatre publication Variety relating a fragment of what follows. A segregated movie house in Ohio seemed interesting, so we wired Canton for an ample story, which see.—Ed.]

Montgomery Ala.

CANTON, Ohio, April 5—A civil rights trial in which a theater patron alleged segregation in a Waynesburg, Ohio, theater ended March 7 in a hung jury.

In the case, the plaintiff, a Negro, John Kelly, 33, sought $5,500 damages from Ralph Bevington, manager and owner of the Mohawk Theater in Waynesburg.

Kelly testified that on Feb. 23, 1955, he seated himself in the right section of the theater and shortly afterward was asked by an usher and Bevington to move to the left section. When he made neither comment nor motion to move, Bevington called a policeman, who offered the alternative of either leaving or moving, Kelly stated.

Kelly asked $500 for shame, disgrace and ridicule he claims resulted from the incident and $5,000 on his contention that he was forcibly deprived of his civil rights.

During the trial it was brought out in testimony that the tickets had a statement on the back of them that the theater reserved the right to seat patrons as it saw fit.

By Helen Carringer

Of The Canton Repository

Bevington said he had operated the theater for 18 years and it was generally accepted that Negroes sat on the left and white patrons on the right, and no difficulties had ever arisen.

Bevington also said he orders his tickets from national suppliers and this statement was never requested by him but appears automatically on the back of all tickets.

Canton's Theater Boycott

SINCE the trial Bevington says 99% of his Negro trade has dropped off. He has raised his admission price from 50 to 75¢ and makes no effort to direct any patron to a seat.

Kelly's was the first of nine similar suits pending in Common Pleas Court. Each was filed, citing much the same causes of action, by Negro men who attended the theater that night.

Barring settlement, Kelly's suit probably will not appear for retrial before fall.

Voluntary Segregation

THE action is not indicative of general segregation in this area. Negroes are not banned from Canton's better hotels and restaurants. It is true they are not frequently seen in such places but the restrictions are self-imposed.

However, annually, the Urban League in Canton holds its banquet and biggest meeting of the year in the ballroom of Canton's leading hotel and white and Negro people sit at the same tables.

The city operated swimming pools follow strictly Ohio state law which absolutely prohibits differentiation because of color. Negroes are seen at all the pools. However, almost all of them prefer to use Jackson Pool—located in an area of the city where many Negroes live.

This pool is the newest, and according to city recreation director, Clifford Schnake, the most modern with the best facilities.

Each year, a queen is elected at each of the city parks. A city queen is selected from the preliminary contest to reign at the city swimming meet at the end of summer. Last year, the queen was a Negro girl.

Pictures Used

THE CANTON REPOSITORY (the city's only newspaper) uses the picture of every Negro girl who requests it with an engagement or wedding story. They are given a one-column picture on either or both occasions.

Incidentally, white girls also receive one-column pictures in the newspaper. No two-column cuts have been used for years, regardless of family, wealth or social position.

Naturally there are not as many Negro girls' pictures, since all non-white races account for only 6.1% of Canton's population of 116,912.

In all of Stark County, there are 12,589 Negroes and 270,605 white people.

Ohio youths organized to push Ike into Dixie's segregation issue

BY REED SMITH

COLUMBUS, Ohio, March 24—(AP)—A Communist-inspired drive is on to enlist Ohio youth in a campaign for federal intervention in Dixie's racial segregation issue.

Secret directives intercepted by internal security officials called the plan "Operation Constitutional Rights."

Disclosure of the directives came from officials of the internal security division of the Ohio attorney general's office.

The Ohio drive is part of a nationwide move for students and working youth to help pressure the Eisenhower administration into intervention.

VEHICLE FOR the campaign is the Labor Youth League, described by officials as the Communist Party's youth arm. They said the league replaced the wartime American Youth for Democracy group that stemmed from the young Communist league.

"The objective of this operation," the directives said, "is to mobilize every single member of the league together with friends, neighbors and fellow workers, to bring maximum pressure on President Eisenhower and the federal government to assume their responsibility and intervene against the Dixiecrat terror in the South. . . . To uphold the Constitution . . . and bring law and order to the South."

OFFICIAL PUBLICATION of the Labor Youth League is the "New Challenge." Records of the Ohio un-American activities commission show that copies of the paper were passed out at Cleveland's John Adams High School in 1952 in the first reported attempt of that nature to recruit pupils.

The league's current Ohio drive is two-pronged. Objective are:

Help obtain 25,000 messages to President Eisenhower within six weeks urging segregation intervention.

GET MORE READERS of New Challenge by offering 4000 half-year subscriptions for 50 cents between mid-April and July.

Officials said the LYL's Ohio operation is centered in Cleveland with branches in other cities over the state.

Exodus from South

North Is Confronted By Negro Headache

TOLEDO, Ohio—(AP)— Aiding the poorly educated Negroes streaming out of the South will be the central problem of many health and welfare agencies in the North and West for the next 20 years, says a Chicago sociologist and population authority.

Already, said Dr. Philip M. Hauser, chairman of the University of Chicago's sociology department, "Northern and Western cities are paying a high price for the poor preparation which the Negro received in the South for urban living.

"They will continue, along with the Negro, to pay an ever higher price in the coming decades if they do not facilitate and accelerate this adjustment by every possible means."

Dr. Hauser, addressing the Ohio Welfare Conference here, said the most important function of the South will continue to be preparing its Negro residents for the complex living they will find in the industrial cities of the North and West.

But, he said, the South has poor facilities to do that. In 1950 the average southern rural Negro had only 4.8 years of schooling. Of the Negroes who leave the South, 94 per cent go to urban areas.

Dr. Hauser predicted that by 1975 Negroes may make up between a fifth and a third of the population of many big industrial areas in the North and West.

Their adjustment in the big cities, he said, will be similar to that of the many waves of newcomers in the past.

He said the new "immigrant" groups always land in the slum areas, "the ports of entry," and at first are rejected by the older residents. But eventually they become accepted and gain "the ability to look down their noses at some newer immigrant group," he said.

Jim Crow Sign Down In Rail Depot

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla. 1-7-56

Snack Bar Refuses To Permit Negro Woman to Drink Coffee

Jim crow signs went down at the Union station Monday, in compliance with the orders of the Interstate Commerce commission, and Negroes started taking their seats in the station on a "first-come-first served" basis.

Services at the snack bar, however, followed the old jim crow pattern. A lady passenger, coming in Tuesday morning, on the way east, who wanted a cup of coffee, was denied permission to drink same at the counter by the attendant.

The waiter served the lady in a paper cup and asked her to drink same after she had gone into the Negro waiting room. The passenger demurred, but left the banned snack bar with her cup of coffee.

Indications at the city bus terminal were that the jim crow waiting room signs would remain.

"No, we have not taken down our signs and have no immediate intention of doing so," declared an official who answered the phone Monday when Mrs. Caroline Burks, a member of the executive committee of the Oklahoma City branch, NAACP, called to find out what progress had been made in keeping with the orders of the Interstate Commerce commission, ending jim crow in bus travel and services.

"The man changed his attitude when I told him who I was," Miss Burks said, "and intimated he was giving the matter some consideration, but had not up to that time complied with the order. I told him it was now the law, and that I was expecting him to abide by it."

Miss Burks is a white member of the NAACP board, and was active in breaking up jim crow at the concerts of the Interdenominational choir, an adjunct of the YWCA in Oklahoma City.

Oklahoma City Officials Banish Segregation in All City Parks, Pools

Call Fri. 2-10-56 P. 1

Kansas City, Mo.

OKLAHOMA CITY, Okla. —City Manager William Gill Jr. and Superintendent of Parks R. R. Murphy announced last Friday that racial segregation in city-owned parks, wading and swimming pools has been banished here.

They made it clear that no official announcement will be made; that the city is simply complying with the recent Supreme Court order outlawing segregation on the basis of race in tax-supported places.

Commenting upon the city's banishment of segregation, Jimmy Stewart, president of the Oklahoma City branch of NAACP, said: "While some members of the branch might want an official proclamation issued, everyone knows that integration is the law and it might be in poor taste to ask a city official to proclaim that he would uphold the law."

The city officials further stated that "they hope no problems would arise from the integration measure but should that occur, they will be dealt with. All of the city's parks, playgrounds, wading pools and swimming pools will continue to operate, since they were built to service their communities."

"However any citizen may frequent and participate in the activities of any city facility for recreation."

It was also made clear that facilities in any of the city's buildings are for the use of citizens without regard to color. That all signs designating the racial use of a facility have been removed; this includes eating at the Snack Bars.

In the State Capitol, however, signs, "Colored," and "White" still hang over doors to rest rooms and wash rooms.

Negroes Resent Charges Made

Dr. Williamston Says Statement is Untrue

IDABEL, Okla. — Dr. H. W. Williamston, president of the Oklahoma Conference of Branches, National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, with offices here, denied charges last week that Negroes in McCurtain county were more against integration than whites in that section.

According to Dr. Williamston, the statement regarding the sentiment of McCurtain county Negroes with reference to integration was made by Lawrence Dillard to the State Board of Education, said "the statement by Mr. Dillard does not reflect the sentiment nor the spirit of McCurtain county Negroes."

Dr. Williamston continued, "We have peacefully gone along with the authorities, feeling that they would not attempt to circumvent the supreme Law of the Land as interpreted by our highest court.

"We fully realize that no part of our modern life is more important than education. Therefore, the Negro people wish to be looked upon as law-abiding citizens, accepting every responsibility rightly placed before us."

Dr. Williamston told The Oklahoma Eagle this week that Negroes in the McCurtain county area are "very indignant over the statement."

Parks Opened To Negroes In Oklahoma

Herald Mon. 2-6-56

Miami, Fla.

OKLAHOMA CITY —(AP)— Racial segregation in municipal parks, including swimming and wading pools, has been ended in Oklahoma City without fanfare.

City officials issued no formal announcement on the action, saying they would handle problems as they arose when the big rush to the parks starts in the spring.

Jimmie Stewart, president of the Oklahoma City chapter of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, said "one of our people wanted a proclamation issued, but everyone finally decided that integration was the law and that it might be in poor taste to ask a city official to proclam he would uphold the law."

Senate Inquiry Urged

WASHINGTON, Feb. 3 (UP)— A delegation from nine Southern states urged the Senate Constitutional Rights subcommittee today to investigate "infringements upon Federal rights of our citizens" in Mississippi.

Edgar A. Love, a Negro Methodist Bishop from Baltimore, headed the twenty-man delegation. He gave Senator William Langer, Republican of North Dakota, a subcommittee member, a petition signed by 2,500 persons from all states.

Senator Richard L. Neuberger, Democrat of Oregon, charged, meanwhile, that some Southern states had "defied" the Supreme Court decision outlawing racial segregation in schools.

Negro Leadership Critically Examined

Black Dispatch Oklahoma City, Okla. 2-16-56

We recall how we marveled sixty years ago when a man, who said he was a Coptic priest, lectured out in the Choctaw neighborhood, near what is at the present time Nicoma Park. It was one of the most unusual experiences of young childhood. This man told some wonderful stories of Ethiopia and the section of the earth where Christianity originated.

But Oklahoma has gone cosmopolitan, and especially the Negroes of this section. The King of Kings not only visited Oklahoma last year, visiting the A. & M. college at Stillwater, but perhaps almost 100 Oklahomans visited the Holy Land, London and Paris last year while in attendance at the Baptist World Alliance. The principal of Douglass high school attended a world conference of teachers in Turkey, and an Oklahoma City boy, born on First street some forty years ago, writes he is studying this summer in Rome.

Times 2-16-56

Airplanes have accentuated the marvel of modern travel.

Before us lies a letter, postmarked from London, from Dr. G. Lamar Harrison. Dr. Harrison says he started writing this letter in Paris and completed it in London. His swift passage reminds us of the night we made a speech in Wichita, and was in bed in Oklahoma City before the meeting was closed in Wichita, and we are reminded also the day when we were flying just above the clouds in Alabama just after leaving Atlanta, actually drinking lemonade.

These Oklahomans should be worth something on the lecture platform when they return. Dr. Harrison tells in his letters of the wonderful inaugural ceremonies which accompanied the induction into office of President Tubman in Liberia. He tells of the native chiefs, dressed in their tribal splendor, who arrived in Monrovia for the festivities from the far-off hinterlands.

Dr. Harrison and his wife, along with Mr. and Mrs. Jake Simmons of Muskogee, flew from Monrovia to Casablanca, making three stops in North Africa, and then on to Rome before arriving in Paris. They had a little time to look in on old Madrid.

The world was a terribly big place when we were a lad and listened to the marvelous tales told by that old man, who may, or may not, have been a Coptic priest, but as science converts a round-the-world trip to about a week's travel we should recognize some of the challenges that this contracted universe slaps in the face of Negroes. As we travel, we should attempt to see whether or not the militancy and leadership of Negroes in America is standing abreast of leadership of the dark world in alien lands. It should be recalled that Americans who went to Bandung last year instantly discovered they were entirely out of step with representatives who came from Asia and Africa. One unfortunate statement exposed American Negro leadership hopelessly conservative.

Most Negro journals and all white publications have been overlooking Africa and her teeming millions, just as they did India before she secured her freedom. But Africa today is a seething mass of unrest from the Mediterranean to Capetown. Both East and West Africa are crying for freedom and self-determination. The American Negro who travels in Africa today should examine what is going on there from the political angle, and determine whether or not the American black man is fighting for the same type and quality of human dignity as the native African.

We know that the standard of living of the American black man is higher than that of any other black group on the globe, but are we to use our "soft" living status to help or hinder our brethren in colonial areas? Is the Negro in America who is still contented with a half loaf of citizenship, and our current "Tuscaloosas" a fit object lesson for those fighting black men and women who are dying by the thousands for self-determination?

Under our form of democracy minority groups have an opportunity always to fight through constitutional process in the courts. Is Negro leadership measuring up to the highest standards in this respect? We recall two years ago, when this writer circulated a petition for a grand jury, the action was frowned upon by many of what we called Oklahoma county Negro leadership. Some even expressed doubt of the Negro's right to demand grand jury action, when all this writer was doing was exercising the right of petition, which is fundamental in the American system.

We recall on another occasion, when we stood up in a meeting in Jackson, Mississippi, several years ago and demanded that the meeting go into executive session so that we could exclude three white men who had entered and had taken seats. We were voted down by the delegates and the whites officially permitted to stay, although every delegate present knew that the presence of any white men in the meeting completely subverted the purpose of the meeting.

In New Orleans a few weeks previous, we had made a motion that the presidents of all Negro land grant colleges meet with the newspaper men, "let their hair down," and tell us what was wrong with the Negro colleges, in that they did not produce graduates useful and effective in the Negro business structure. In the judgment of this writer, the presence in that meeting of three white men would make Negro college presidents reluctant to say what the lags were, and how they were brought about in Negro colleges. Everybody there knew we were right, but they almost to a man voted to subvert the real purpose of the meeting.

While we talked, a man who for two generations had autocratically dictated policies for Negro teachers in Texas, got up and ran out of the meeting. The question we wanted to ask is "Why is this man an absolute dictator of Negro affairs in Texas, but nothing but a rabbit in Jackson, Mississippi, when an Oklahoma Negro arises and insists that three white men be excused from the meeting?" We took the same position in St. John Baptist church several years ago, attempting to exclude a Times reporter while we discussed a city situation, and everyone voted our proposal down.

Time out of number we have gone to the city hall with delegations of Negroes pledged to a certain objective and purpose, only when we arrived to find a break in the ranks of the blacks when some one of the Negro delegation got up and began to stumble along to say, "Well, I did not see this in the light that Councilman So-and-So has explained it. That gives me an entirely different view. I guess I'll have to change my position."

Following such a break in the Negroes' rank, others hurriedly followed, and when we left the city hall, or the governor's office the entire purpose of the committee had been destroyed.

What American Negroes who travel these days should study with great care, is whether or not we who reside in America are as independent and resolute in our thinking as those blacks in foreign climes. Do we have the firmness and constancy that immobilizes our following? If you are a leader in your community, ask yourself this question, "Do I have the courage to use every constitutional process in fighting for the rights of my group?" That is the measuring yardstick you should use in examining and evaluating your leadership.

Do you oppose going to the city hall or the governor's office with a black man simply because the whites do not like that particular black man? Is the reason why you do not want to go with him simply because you do not want to be joined with a black man who is too persistent in seeking his objectives? We hope those who are visiting Africa and Asia these days will take time out to examine black, brown and yellow leadership from this angle. The English are not too wild and enthusiastic about Prime Minister Kwame Nkrumah, but millions of West African natives swarm daily about this fearless black leader. Perhaps American Negroes have their thinking clothes on backward. If the 16 million Negroes in the United States would throw all of their support, undivided, behind Roy Wilkins, President Eisenhower would be inviting Wilkins occasionally to dinner and to state affairs. Let's use our travel funds these days to find out what makes dark leadership effective in foreign lands.

"OKLAHOMA" FOR WHITES ONLY— Oklahoma's more than 145,500 Negroes will sing "Oh, What a Beautiful Morning" as they at last reach full first class citizenship status in their state. Because of race Negroes will not be permitted to see the colorful Rogers and Hammerstein musical "Oklahoma," now showing at the Rialto Theater downtown Tulsa. The management explained that provisions had not been made to accomodate Negroes. The film opened here June 8, with thousands joining in the festivities. From all these events, however, Negroes were excluded. "Oklahoma" is now in its third week at the Rialto. It is expected to run 60 or 90 days. The musical, in the new Todd-AO process, is being shown exclusively at the Rialto—the only theater in the state equipped to the 70 mm. color film.

'Arrangements' Not Made For 145,500 Citizens

Negro Oklahomans Declare Discrimination Is Groundless

By E. L. Madison, Jr.
Of The Eagle Staff

Although his fathers before him helped settle this state, although he now represents more than one tenth of the state's population, the Negro citizen of Oklahoma today is told that he cannot see the Southwestern premiere showing of the movie version of "Oklahoma."

The reason for this social injustice, according to Jack Hull, manager of the Tulsa Downtown Theaters, is simply that "arrangements have not been made for the attendance of Negroes." Hull made this statement to The Oklahoma Eagle and to other interested North Tulsans who contacted him concerning seeing the movie which opened June 8, at the Rialto Theater. 13 West Third Street.

His response to one North Tulsan's inquiry was short and to the point. "There will be no seats for Negroes," Hull said.

The theater manager, a Mr. Haberlin, said last week that the Rialto had not set up a policy for patronizing Negroes.

No Praise from Negroes

Governor Raymond Gary praised Tulsa for getting the Rodgers and Hammerstein Todd-AO production before Oklahoma City. However, the 145,503 citizens who make up Oklahoma's Negro population can find little praises for being singled out as different or not fit to see a nationally acclaimed film bearing the name of their state.

The fact that attendance at a theater is considered a matter of private concern is not important to the Negro. Being left out of a statewide event hits a hard blow. It hurts his pride.

It makes him feel different when there is no difference that could harm his white brother in any way. The only differences, those being color of skin and texture of hair, are little grounds for discrimination—not in 1956, 94 years after the Emancipation Proclamation.

Oklahoma has advanced in great strides since the onward march of desegregation and integration began. It is hoped that even greater forward steps will be made in that direction, to include integration in recreational areas.

The Rialto manager said that "Oklahoma" may run in Tulsa for possible 60 or 90 days. But it may be months or years before Negro citizens can see the film. Should an Oklahoma citizen have to go outside the state to see "Oklahoma."

Forget About Color

There are many doors not yet opened to the citizen of color. It is our earnest prayer that the day will come when our white brothers will realize through Christian love that color does not make the man.

Maybe movies are not important. But the fact remains that moving pictures provide a form of entertainment that is as American as the hot dog or the Sunday comic section. Negroes are Americans. In this case, they are Oklahomans too.

Lack Of Rights To All Challenged By Senator

Tues 3-20-56

PHILADELPHIA — Giving equal rights to all American citizens without regard to race, color or religion will have a great bearing on this country's victory or defeat in its conflict with Communist imperialism around the world, U. S. Senator Thomas C. Hennings, Jr. (D.-Mo.) told the Friendly Sons of St. Patrick here at the society's annual dinner.

Senator Hennings said the two national problems of Communist aggression abroad and the maintenance of constitutional rights at home are so complicated and serious that solving them will test the ablest thinking of the American people.

"We are faced overseas by a great imperialist power which is hostile to us and is challenging us to combat in many parts of the world, Hennings said. "I refer to the Communist Empire of Russia." He said that a trip to Russia last year had brought him home impressed by the great advances Russia had made in technology, industry and public education since the revolution which overthrew the Czars.

"To be sure it has another desotism today," Hennings said. "But let us not under-estimate the power of that despotism, nor the appeal which its religion of Communism has in many parts of the world where people of various colors have been living under colonial rule on the verge of hunger. To combat that revolutionary faith of the Russians effectively," Hennings said, "we must never forget that we ourselves are children of the American revolution. The principles of the American revolutionists who dared to create a government to be the servant of a people rather than its master will win in the yong run. I do not believe God almighty ever intended mankind to live forever under earthly despots." Daily World

Sneator Hennings bracketed "the problem of realizing the objectives of our own great American revolution" with defense against Russian imperialism around the world. "Our domestic problem," he said, "is one of seeing to it that all our citizens, without regard to race, color, religion or ancestry shall live under the equal protection of our constitution and our laws. It is how we may see to it that all of our citizens may enjoy equally the blessings of our constitutional freedom. And how we solve this problem at home will have a great bearing on whether or not we win or lose in our great conflict with that hostile Communist Empire abroad." P. 4

Senator Hennings said he believed that the best answer to manifestoes against the equality of all citizens under Federal law would be action by Congress to strengthen its protection. In this connection he said he hoped for adoption of four bills which as Chairman of the Subcommittee on Constitutional Rights he has forwarded, with Subcommittee approval, to the Judiciary Committee. The four bills are: (1) A bill to protect the voting rights of all citizens in Federal elections and primaries; (2) a bill to establish new civil rights enforcement machinery in the Attorney General's office; (3) one to extend protection against bodily attack to all members of the armed forces; and (4) a new anti-lynching bill.

3 Churches Join Fight On Neighborhood Bias

Philadelphia Pa.

Jan 7-8-56

Three religious denominations have joined forces to preserve, through good will and tolerance, the Germantown-Pelham area which they serve.

The cornerstone of the joint effort is democratic acceptance and welcome for new families of all creeds and races who establish their homes in the neighborhood.

OBJECT IS HARMONY

Working to create harmony among the residents is the Church Community Council, composed of committees representing the Church of the Epiphany, the Germantown Jewish Center and the Unitarian Church of Germantown.

Twelve representatives of the three churches, headed by Howard Stoertz, have laid down a program by which new families are made welcome and rapidly integrated into the life of the community.

What the Church Community Council has discovered in the comparatively brief time of its existence is that tensions quickly disappear and newcomers learn to be good neighbors with pride in the appearance of their homes and their neighborhoods.

FIGHT AGAINST FEAR

Among the old residents, the Council spreads the gospel of friendship and understanding and seeks to destroy panic and fear that may come with an influx of new neighbors.

Running away because of the newcomers is strongly discouraged as being detrimental to the entire community and the old residents are cautioned, too, that panic sales of their homes only depreciate market values and rob them of their own investments in their properties.

To maintain community leadership and foster neighborhood acquaintance, the Church Council has adopted this program:

Education and information within their congregations and neighborhoods to build acquaintance and understanding.

Encouraging present residents to stay in the area.

Promoting a sell-your-neighborhood campaign to encourage prospective buyers of high standards, regardless of religion or race, to buy the homes that are for sale.

Maintaining and improving the quality of schools, community facilities and physical and spiritual values of the community.

Inviting other churches and like-minded individuals to join in this common effort.

One of the first steps taken by the council, Stoertz said, was to obtain a petition signed by residents of Lincoln dr., condemning practices of some real estate dealers.

The petition was sent to the Germantown Realty Board, the Philadelphia Board of Realtors and to all real estate agents doing business in the Pelham area of Germantown.

The petition objected to the following practices:

Showing or selling houses to members of only one racial group.

Urging owners to sell because new people have moved into a block.

Soliciting sales of owners who have shown no desire to sell.

Posting an excessive number of "for sale" signs in the same block at the same time.

Advertising the neighborhood as "mixed."

"As is apparent," Stoertz said, "this area is experiencing a change, but thanks to the efforts of our own and several similar organizations, the change has thus far been gradual, with a singular lack of tensions.

"We accept a racially mixed neighborhood," he continued, "believing it is in the best American and religious tradition, but we are also very anxious to maintain the high standards of the area and to prevent panic selling. This we believe would result in another 'segregated' district.

PANIC SELLING ABSENT

"There has been little evidence of panic selling thus far, but the practices of some of our short-sighted real estate operators will tend to produce this if it is not checked," he said.

Working with Stoertz, are also Allan G. Mitchell, George Schermer and the Rev. Max F. Daskam, of the Unitarian Church; Rabbi Elias Charry, Leon H. Magil, Louis E. Marrits and Russell Moses of the Jewish Center and the Rev. J. Wesley Twelves, Mrs. T. Harold Fox, William C. Leyshon and Mrs. Roland Whitehurst, of the Church of the Epiphany.

Pastor Resigns As Flock Turns Down Integration Bid

Black Chronicle Oklahoma City Okla.

Feb 11-18-56

PHILADELPHIA.— (ANP)—A Baptist minister resigned his pastorate here last week after his congregation turned down his request to admit Negroes to membership.

The Rev. David E. Gregory, pastor of the New Berean Baptist church, read a letter of resignation at last Sunday's regular service, after losing out in what was described by a pro-segregationist member as a "family quarrel."

However, statements by the 40-year-old Rev. Gregory regarding the controversy indicate it was fare more than a congregational riff. He indicated that a battle had been waged to defeat his request. He said the issue of integration was put to members in a questionnaire and that they approved it, 56 to 53. But he admitted that those opposed to it said they would leave the church if Negroes joined. This was taken to mean that the threatened walkout influenced the congregation in defeating the move.

One segregationist, Thomas W. Cox of Suburban Upper Darby, acting chairman of the board of deacons and a member of the church for 48 years, declared:

Minister Exploited Him, Negro Claims

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 16 (AP).—A Negro farm worker from Orangeburg, S. C., in a suit filed yesterday, accuses a minister of exploiting his life in the South for publicity purposes and then failing to pay him the money he says they had agreed upon.

Willie Sharper came to Philadelphia from South Carolina last January with his wife and five children. The suit, filed in Common Pleas Court, alleges that William Lee Bentley, Negro pastor of the Emanuel Institutional Baptist Church, made a deal with Mr. Sharper calling for the latter and his family to appear at church gatherings and other affairs to tell their experiences in the South, including some with the Ku Klux Klan.

The object of the appearances, Mr. Sharper said in his suit, was to publicize Mr. Bentley and raise funds. Mr. Sharper said the agreement was that all money raised would be used by Mr Bentley to pay the Sharpers' living expenses.

Mr. Sharper said he and his family made several appearances and that Mr. Bentley owes him more than $1,500 collected.

Speakers Absent For Miss. Meet

Defender P.1 Sat. 5-5-56

JACKSON, Miss. — (ANP) — The Regional Council of Negro leadership opened its annual sessions here Friday, but its two main speakers, Rep. Adam Clayton Powell and Rev. Martin Luther King, were not among those present.

Chicago Ill.

There was some disagreement about why the two were absent, but it is known that Gov. J. P. Coleman sent telegrams to them asking them not to come to Mississippi.

"It would be a shame," said Coleman, "to have professional agitators like Powell and King come into our state and fan the fires anew."

The identical telegrams to Powell and King said:

"The press reports that you are scheduled to address a public meeting in Jackson, Miss., on Friday of this week. Mississippi has no intention now or hereafter of interfering with the constitutional rights of freedom of assembly and freedom of speech, yet I feel it my duty as governor to inform you that conditions in our state are now more tranquil than at any time in recent months, and in view of your record, your appearance here will be a great disservice to our Negro people. I trust you will reconsider and indefinitely postpone your visit."

Coleman added that the people of Mississippi "are not invading other states with reference to this question and I hope the sound-thinking Negroes of Mississippi will not lend their approval to the presence of overnight scalawags and carpetbaggers in our midst."

Powell shot back: "I am a professional clergyman and if he believes that the practice of the principles of Jesus Christ and obedience to the Constitution are agitation, then he is correct."

King said his decision not to appear had nothing to do with Coleman's request, but was caused by the fact that he had made previous commitments.

Powell stated that he had had no intentions of attending the meethould take a stronger stand on ace relations.

M. Howard, president of the council.

The New York Congressman said, however, that he most definitely plans to visit the state any time hereafter that his schedule will allow.

And, in a telegram to Coleman, Powell got in a parting shot:

"When I do decide to come to Mississippi, I will most certainly advise you so that your office can extend to me the courtesies always extended to Representatives of the United States."

Battle for Delegates Has No Holds Barred

Inquirer P. PA-d
Tues. 8-14-56 Philadelphia Pa.

CHICAGO, Aug. 13

BATTLE lines which were rather loosely drawn until Saturday when former President Truman spoke his little piece for Gov. Averell Harriman, were approaching fiddle-string tautness today as the Democratic National Convention opened for business.

MRS. ROOSEVELT

Delegates and party leaders, many of whom viewed the convention as something of a lark, during which Adlai Stevenson would be nominated for President, now realize they are in for a few days of bitter factional in-fighting. History tells us that when Democrats fall to battling among themselves no holds are barred and mayhem is regarded as a mild method of administering punishment.

By no means the least interesting phase of the struggle is the role in which Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt has been cast.

Indeed, it would not be an understatement to say that what we have here in Chicago is a fight featuring Mrs. Roosevelt, widow of the New Deal President, and Harricum Truman, whose claim to fame rests on his sponsorship of the Fair Deal.

In the absence of a voice from the grave, Mrs. Roosevelt has taken it on herself to prove that her candidate, Stevenson, is eminently qualified to speak as a New Dealer. Because of this determination on her part, she has stepped to the front as the actual spokesman of the Stevenson forces.

Harriman, of course, has been contending right along that because of the experience he gained as an aide to both Roosevelt and Truman he has fallen heir to all they represented, good, bad and indifferent, in national and international policy. And in this he has blessing of Mr. Truman.

Truman's denunciation of Stevenson's policy of "moderation" has been answered by Mrs. Roosevelt. Moderation, says she, is not a bad word; in fact it's a wise word. Her late husband, she would have you believe, was a moderate in all things, including, it may be assumed, his effort to pack the Supreme Court, an enterprise which led to its rejection at the hands of Democrats and Republicans alike.

TRUMAN insists Stevenson lacks the drive of a real fighter. Mrs. Roosevelt says he is the kind of fighter the country needs. At least, he fights in her style, and that's what she likes about him.

She admits that at one stage of the campaign last spring Stevenson's "intellectual coldness" had her worried. In the California primaries, however, he descended from the higher altitude of intellectuality to mingle with the common folk and speak their language. The result was a victory for Stevenson over Senator Kefauver, the beginning of the end for the man of the coonskin cap.

Truman's friends report his innate chivalry causes him to hesitate to come to grips with the one-time mistress of the White House. Nevertheless, he finds some consolation in the old principle that if you get into politics you must be able to take it as well as dish it out.

Meanwhile the Stevenson-Harriman or Roosevelt-Truman contest has caused many delegates to think in terms of a deadlock and a possible dark horse entry. Under blankets in the stable are such potential runners as Senator Lyndon Johnson, of Texas, Senate majority leader, who insists he's a serious candidate," and Senator Stuart Symington, of Truman's Missouri, who said, on arriving here yesterday, he is ready for anything. Of course, the happiest bloke around the town is "Happy" Chandler, Governor of Kentucky, who says his prospects are good and who currently is deriving his happiness from the unhappiness of others.

And again, it would be well to keep in mind that the Mrs. Roosevelt-Truman fight is no mere sparring match. They are not "fiddling around" as the prize fight reporters say. An ancient grudge between the House of Roosevelt and the House of Truman is now in full view of the populace.

Mrs. FDR Maps 3-Point Plan For Integration

Defender P. 12
Chicago Ill

COLUMBUS, Ohio — A three-point program to speed racial integration was outlined here last week by Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt who also pointed out that Adlai E. Stevenson was the man who could put it into effect.

The former first lady of the nation proposed:

Bul. 11-27-56

1. Desegregation in housing as a preliminary step to the integration of schools; 2. protection of every citizen's right to vote, and 3. elimination of Senate Rule 22 which permits filibustering of vital bills.

Because Mrs. Roosevelt recognizes the racial bias that exists in the North as well as the South, she explained that her plan for desegregation of housing was meant for the North as well as the South, particularly the larger cities.

Mrs. Roosevelt Urges North To Integrate Housing

Sun. 11-25-56

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Warning that there is "no real possibility for school integration in the South if the North doesn't do its part" Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt urged the North last week to integrate its housing.

The former first lady of the land proposed that Northern states provide integrated housing to show the South and Asiatic nations leadership in democracy.

"Until there is integrated housing in the North, there is no real possibility that children will be naturally integrated in the schools," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

She added: "If we in the North do not do our part, it will be far easier for Southern people to go on with the program of opposing desegregation that they have already begun in some states."

Mrs. Roosevelt Urges Women To Attack Segregation Bars

Wonld Birmingham, Ala. P. 8

Sat, 11-24-56

WASHINGTON — (ANP)—The 300 women attending the four-day conference of the National Council of Negro Women meeting here last week heard some of the nation's leading citizens expound the necessity of better race relations in this country.

Foremost among them were Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt who underscored the importance of desegregation in America as it affects the present international situation.

Dr. Mordecai Johnson, president of Howard University, criticized the churches for their failure to take the lead in the desegregation movement. Mrs. Agnes E. Myer, wife of the board chairman of The Washington Post Co., urged the Federal Government to take the lead in solving racial problems.

Dr. Frank Graham, special U. N. mediator, discussed the global concept of human and civil rights. Mason Sears, U. S. Representative of the Trusteeship of U. N. urged a closer relationship between America and Africa.

Mrs. Roosevelt declared that America would never be able to succeed in the fight against Communism unless "we are able to solve the problems which confront us here at home."

She urged the women to attack the barriers in their own communities which hinder progress toward desegregation.

Dr. Johnson challenged women—both mothers and teachers—with the responsibility of helping implement the Supreme Court decision.

Women could have profound influence in America and the world, he said, if they became aware of their potential strength and face up to the problem of human relations.

He further stated that the desegregation decision "ought to have been inspired and exemplified in the churches."

The conference was climaxed with a banquet at the Willard hotel Saturday evening which was addressed by Mrs Myer.

This well known lecturer and writer took issue with President Eisenhower's contention that desegregation of schools is a state and local matter. The Supreme Court decision made it a Federal responsibility, she emphasized. This calls for Federal leadership and it must come from the President.

Mrs. Myer pointed out that the growing disrespect for law because of the high court ruling should be a concern of the President.

"He should be interested in implementing means by which a renewed respect for law can come into being.

She suggested that this could be done by appointing a Federal commission to study the social reasons underlying the problems of desegregation. It should also study the general tension, unrest and intolerance that endanger the national stability.

This commission would consist of leaders of both races and be staffed by experts who could bring the approach of scientific research to the job of collecting available information and summarizing it in language everyone can understand.

"Our democracy has a bad conscience because we preached equality and haven't practiced it," continued the speaker.

She contended that preaching brotherly love hasn't worked because the gap between the races has been too wide to span by talk.

"President Eisenhower is always preaching the importance of a sound dollar," but she asked, "what good is a sound dollar unless we have sound citizenship?"

Mrs. Roosevelt Expresses Feeling That Negroes Will Get Equal Status

Worcd P.1 Atlanta, Ga.

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, writing in her syndicated column last week, answered some questions from a Fresno, Calif., man who wanted to know, among other things, whether Negroes will ever reach the status of first-class citizenship.

ECONOMIC SITUATION

"Of course I believe that the American Negro will reach status of first-class citizenship," Mrs. Roosevelt replied. "Many of them already achieved it and more of them will do so as education is available and their economic situation improves."

The Californian also said:

"How can an individual, stigmatized as an inferior being, something less that a normal human, as a second-string citizen and an American 'untouchable,' prevent himself from feeling these attitudes deeply and being scarred indelibly?

"Do you think the South has made progress in overcoming this problem?

"What can you and we do as individuals besides putting our own prejudices aside?

Mrs. Roosevelt, in replying, said:

RACE, COLOR

"(1) I think it is difficult not to be hurt, but if you can preserve your pride in your race and yourself by making yourself as valuable a citizen as posible, you will help minimize the harm.

"(2) I do think the south has this feeling of inferiority on other human beings because of race, color or religion actually do more harm to themselves than to their victims.

"(2) I do thing the south has made great progress in solving its own racial problems. Undoubtedly the Negroes would like to see changes come faster, and some of us would be glad to see that, too, but southerners have a responsibility for their own development. The South is made up of not just white people, but both white and Negro, and I think those states are coming to realize that sooner or later all must live on an equal basis.

"(3) You and I, as individuals, can do a great deal more than setting aside our own prejudices. We can try to become oblivious to any bar between us and any other human being. We can fight for equality of opportunity to obtain a job, to education, to housing and health opportunities and we can make sure that our friends are chosen because of the people they are, and for no other reason."

progress in integrating the schools. Mrs. Roosevelt sharply disagreed. Arthur S. Summerfield, postmaster general, told questioners on the CBS-TV program "Face the Nation" that the President had used "the proper discretion, patience and understanding" in his handling of the matter. Attorney General Herbert Brownell Jr., appearing on the independently produced TV program "Reporter's Roundup," said progress had been "remarkable and fine."

HITS LEADERSHIP

Mrs. Roosevelt, on NBC's "Meet the Press," said she was not satisfied with the administration's record of leadership and urged that the country should "move extremely quickly" to desegregate in the North, while allowing for a slower pace in the South.

The widow of the late Democratic President conceded that in the South "it can't happen overnight. . . . It will have to be slower than in the North." She said the first step that should be taken in the South "is to guarantee to every citizen his right to vote, then the other things will follow."

"THING OF PAST"

Asked to comment on Republican demands that Democratic presidential candidate Adlai E. Stevenson "divorce himself" from remarks on the Alger Hiss case made last week by former President Truman, Mrs. Roosevelt said she considered that "a thing of the past. . . . Of rather moderate importance." Truman said he did not believe that Hiss was a traitor, or gave secrets to the Russians.

"I see no particular reason for him (Stevenson) to say anything about it," Mrs. Roosevelt said.

She said she thought the Hiss matter was "settled and done with" when the courts found the former state department aide guilty of perjury. She said the Republicans were "just dragging up something which has no particular importance."

DEFEND IKE

Both Summerfield and Brownell defended the administration against recent charges by Stevenson that it had condoned "corruption." Summerfield said "nothing could be farther from the truth." Brownell said the record of the administration "has been in marked contrast to the scandal and corruption that existed in the Truman administration."

Both men were asked about the resignation of Harold E. Talbott, former secretary of the Air Force, who quit his job suddenly after a congressional committee disclosed that he had solicited business from the Pentagon for a firm in which he had an interest.

CLEAN RECORD

Brownell said that "putting things in perspective . . . What we want to do on a program of this sort is to take the over-all picture . . . There has never been in my time an administraiton that is as clean and decent."

Summerfield said that Talbott made "a mistake in judgment, but certainly committed no act that could be called corrupt."

WASHINGTON, Sept. 16—Members of the Eisenhower cabinet defended the administration's record on desegregation today, but Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said she thought the President should have called a conference of Negro and white leaders to help ease racial tensions.

The explosive issue was a major topic of weekend political discussion for spokesmen of both in winning the Democratic nomination for Stevenson in Chicago, said she thought his election would mean "a transition to a man who has a well-thought-out policy" on foreign affairs.

She said Eisenhower "gained his knowledge of foreign affairs as a general in the European theater, carrying out policies made by other people . . . It is not the same thing as having to think out policies for yourself."

Asked if she would charge, as more Democrats have, that the President is "dominated by big business," Mrs. Roosevelt replied quickly:

"Oh, no. The President is a good man, and he would want always to do the right thing as he saw it. He has a great admiration for successful businessmen because he has never been a successful businessman, and you tend to admire what you don't understand."

She observed also that "to be actually in control of your party, you must be a well-trained politician. Being a well-trained general does not necessarily make you a well-trained politician."

Mrs. FDR Raps Bias In North

Defender Chicago, Ill. Sat. 1-29-56

NEW YORK — (INS) — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt said last week that Southern states should be given time to achieve school integration but urged that Northern cities, such as New York, Chicago and Detroit, take immediate steps to end segregation.

The widow of the late president, appearing on NBC's televised program, "Meet The Press", also asserted that President Eisenhower has failed to exercise leadership to bring about the end of racial discrimination in the schools.

NORTH SHOULD LEAD

Mrs. Roosevelt said that Northern cities with heavy Negro populations should lead the way by ending any segregation that still persists.

Of the South, she commented: "Here, we cannot move as quickly. . .it can't happen overnight. On the other hand, we can't stand still."

Questioned about politics, Mrs. Roosevelt bluntly said that she cannot find any "personal respect" for Vice President Richard M. Nixon because of the 1950 senatorial campaign he ran against former Rep. Helen Gahagan Douglas in California.

NIXON KNEW BETTER

She contended Nixon had accused Mrs. Douglas of being a Communist when he knew better from his personal acquaintance with the Democratic congresswoman.

Mrs. Roosevelt remarked "Anyone who wanted to be elected that much I can't admire his character."

Concerning Mr. Eisenhower, she commented: "The President is a good man and would always want to do the right thing but he does have great admiration for a successful businessman which he has never been."

She also claimed that the President "gained his knowledge as a general carrying out the policies which others made and that is not the same thing as thinking out policies for oneself."

She was asked about former President Harry S. Truman's remark that convicted perjurer Alger Hiss was not a Soviet spy and that the case was a Republican 'Red Herring".

NOT AN ISSUE

Republicans, including GOP National Chairman Leonard W. Hall, have demanded that Democratic presidential candidate Adlai Stevenson disavow Truman's statement.

Mrs. Roosevelt contended that the Hiss question is "an unimportant issue" in the 1956 campaign and a matter that has been "settled and done with." She said she is willing to stand by the court's decision until evidence of Hiss' innocence is presented.

Dealing with the Suez crisis, she expressed belief that the U. S. was faulty of appeasement by failing to protest over a year ago when the Egyptian government barred sraeli ships from using the canal.

Says Stevenson's Remarks on Draft Were Not Clear

Mon. 9-17-56

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt said last night that Mr. Stevenson had "failed to explain to the majority of people unless one is already in the know" what he meant in forecasting an end to the military draft "within the foreseeable future."

New York

The widow of the former President made the observation to reporters at the National Broadcasting Company television studio, 30 Rockefeller Center.

It came after she had offered her own explanation of the Democratic Presidential nominee's views on the "Meet the Press" program. She had been asked whether she agreed with the hope he voiced to the American Legion in Los Angeles Sept. 5 that the draft eventually could be ended.

"I think, of course," she said, "few people really understood what was meant by that. Most of us who are studying what is going to be the future of our defense know that with new weapons it is going to require an amount of skill in handling [in] which it would be most wasteful to take young people and train them for two years and then turn them out.

"It would be ridiculous nonsense. Why waste them? And that's not the type of Army we're going to need in the future. We're going to need perhaps quite a large army of technicians who might not be in the Army, but who would be keeping things up to what they should be. But we will need a mobile, fine trained, extremely skilled fighting force. And that was what would lay back of the thought that we might not need a large draft."

'Desegregate Harlem'

On white-Negro relations, Mrs. Roosevelt said the North must "desegregate Harlem" and parts of Chicago and Detroit.

"The first step that has to come in the South is protection of every citizen in his right to vote," she said.

The Eisenhower Administration, she asserted, should have summoned a conference of leaders of both races after the Supreme Court school desegregation ruling.

Mrs. Roosevelt said she opposed Vice President Richard M. Nixon because he falsely called former Representative Helen Gahagn Douglas a Communist in defeating her for the Senate in California in 1950.

"I always felt anyone who wanted an election so much that they would use those means did not have the kind of character that I really admired in public life," she said.

(NEW YORK, N. Y.—(ANP)—Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt has denounced the officials from 12 southern states who attended the Memphis meeting of the Federation for Constitutional government.

Writing in her syndicated newspaper column last week, Mrs. Roosevelt charged that the pro-segregation organization "affects the principles an dthe whole form of government by which people live in this country."

The FCG was organized two weeks ago to fight racial integration and what its leaders term "other efforts to destroy the Constitution."

Present at the meeting were Sen. James Eastland (D-Miss.), Georgia's Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and numerous other congressmen, governors and ex-governors from the south.

"This secret organization certainly seems to be contrary to the basic beliefs of the majority of the American people," Mrs. Roosevelt wrote.

She said that although the southern officials have sworn to "preserve" the Constitution, they have opened war on the Supremee Court which was established to protect the constitutional rights of American citizens.

"You cannot flout the decisions of the highest court of the land and obey the Constitution of the U. S." Mrs. Roosevelt ssaid She added:

"While a law is in force it should be lived up to. You have a right to try to change it, and if you if you can persuade the majority that it should be changed then it will be changed.

Mrs. Roosevelt Tops Poll Again as 'Most Admired'

Herald Tribune N.Y. Sat. 1-14-56

9th Time in 10 Years; Mrs. Luce And Mrs. Eisenhower Are Next

By George Gallup
Director, American Institute of Public Opinion

PRINCETON, N. J., Jan. 13.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt again tops the list as the woman most admired by the American people today.

This is the ninth time in ten years that the late President's wife has been No. 1 in the institute's annual survey to determine which woman, living today in any part of the world, is held in highest esteem by the United States public.

In second place this year is the United States Ambassador to Italy, Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce. Third most frequently mentioned is Mrs. Mamie Eisenhower.

Margaret in Top Ten

A newcomer to the top ten this year is Princess Margaret of England whose romance with Group Captain Peter Townsend received world-wide mention in the press.

The poll on the most admired man, as reported at the end of December, showed President Eisenhower and Prime Minister Churchill of England No. 1 and 2, respectively, in the list of the top ten.

Institute interviewers, in today's survey, asked a cross-section of the American public the question that they have asked annually since 1946:

"What woman that you have heard or read about, living today in any part of the world, do you admire the most?"

Others on List

The ten most frequently mentioned women, ranked by order of mention:

1. Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt
2. Mrs. Clare Boothe Luce
3. Mrs. Mamie Eisenhower
4. Miss Helen Keller
5. Queen Elizabeth
6. Madame Chiang Kai-shek.
7. Princess Margaret
8. Mme. Vijaya Pandit
9. Sen. Margaret Chase Smith
10. Mrs. Oveta Culp Hobby

The one year since 1946 that Mrs. Roosevelt did not head the list was in 1951 when she ran second to Sister Kenny, internationally famous nurse who pioneered a treatment for polio. Sister Kenny died in her native Australia in 1952.

Writing in her syndicated newspaper column last week, Mrs. Roosevelt charged that the pro-segregation organization "affects the principles and the whole form of government by which people live in this country."

The FCG was organized two weeks ago to fight racial integration and what its leaders term "other efforts to destroy the Constitution."

Present at the meeting were Sen. James Eastland (D., Miss.), Georgia's Atty. Gen. Eugene Cook and numerous other congressmen, governors and ex-governors from the South.

"This secret organization certainly seems to be contrary to the basic beliefs of the majority of the American people," Mrs. Roosevelt wrote.

She said that although the southern officials have sworn to "preserve" the Constitution, they have opened war on the Supreme Court which was established to protect the constitutional rights of American citizens.

"You cannot flout the decisions of the highest court of the land and obey the Constitution of the U. S.," Mrs. Roosevelt said. She added:

"While a law is in force it should be lived up to. You have a right to try to change it, and if you can persuade the majority that it should be changed then it will be changed.

"But you must abide by the law until it is changed or you will be flouting the fundamental things that make this a democracy and a law-abiding nation."

dom far more important than any oil values of the Near East, Mrs. Roosevelt believes.

Describing improvements in Israel she saw in a visit last spring, compared to one she made three years ago, the wife of the late president envisioned the Jewish nation as "a base for freedom from which the concept of democracy could spread over the Near East."

"Israel has crossed centuries in a few years," Mrs. Roosevelt said, praising the program of progress which she believes is essential if backward nations are to be linked closely with the rest of the world in an atomic peace.

Mrs. Roosevelt urged Jewish leaders to think of their work for Israel not as a humanitarian program in the interests of their own people but as "a piece of work valuable to the whole free world."

"You are not just helping your relatives," she told a Jewish women's audience of about 500, "You are spearheading the struggle between the free world and communism. Israel is one of the most important outposts we can preserve."

Outbreak of hostilities between the Arab nations and Israel could mean a setback to world peace the free world has not considered, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt told Greater Miami Bonds for Israel compaigners here Saturday.

Mrs. Roosevelt, who received a first "Woman of Valor" award at Sabbath luncheon of the national women's division of the bond organization at the Seville Hotel, termed Israel "the one little spot in the Near East where people have a conception of democracy."

Miami Fla.

If the Arab nations, aided by the Soviet Union, move to take over Israel, the free world would lose a foothold of free-pin as recognition of outstanding leadership in the cause of world freedom. The new award will be made in the future to women who sell $100,000 or more in State of Israel bonds.

The luncheon was part of a first-day program of the 1956 Inangural Conference for Israel Bonds in progress at the Seville. Some 800 Jewish leaders from the United States and Canada are expected to take part in the conference which continues through Sunday.

The meeting sparks a drive for 75 million dollars in Israel bonds. The total is expected to be reached by the close of sessions with a luncheon Sunday.

Opening meeting of the conference Saturday morning heard a letter from Adlai E. Stevenson, 1952 Democratic presidential candidate, call for "a long term and more constructive program" in the Near East to counter Soviet shipment of arms to Egypt.

Speakers at an 8:30 a.m. breakfast Sunday will be Dr. Joseph J. Schwartz, vice-president of the bond organization, and Morris W. Berinstein, national campaign chairman. Speaking at the closing luncheon will be David Horowitz, governor of the Central Bank of Israel, and Feimberg.

MRS. FDR SAYS:

Integration Is Successful In Newark Housing Project

Herald P. 5-C Miami, Fla. Thurs. 2-9-56

By ELEANOR ROOSEVELT

My five days back home since my trip to the West Coast were busy ones, but work and pleasure were pleasantly mixed. I want to tell you of the few hours I spent in Newark, N. J.

MRS. FDR

Some representatives of United Nations delegations had been asked through our mayors hospitaity committee to visit Newark to see work done thre by the local AAUN chapter, and at the same time to visit a new housing project where integration has been carried out with great success.

In the latter, colored people, Puerto Ricans and white people were living side by side and working out their problems.

Representatives from Israel, Liberia and India started out with me a little after 11 A.M. First we were shown the square in Newark which has been renamed United Nations square. The new public library stands on one side of it and the mayor's representative told me that they plan to make this square a cultural center.

We met in the library and were welcomed by city officials. I was glad that our visitors saw what a delightful place an American public library can be, with open fire on the hearth, comfortable chairs and bookshelves.

Here, also, they have exhibits about the United Nations and are cooperating with our local chapter in giving out information

We proceeded to the Referend R. Hayes homes. This housing project is fortunate in having a settlement house incorporated into the development. Fuld house offers the tenants and their neighbors a day nursery, group recreation for children and adults, a day camp, community organizations and a family counseling service. This is a great addition to the largest public housing project in New Jersey.

We were treated to a very delightful lunch and, judging from the short speeches made by our foreign delegates, all of them enjoyed their experience. I certainly found it a very pleasant and inspiring day.

Mrs. Roosevelt Resigns From Board of NAACP

Call & Post Kansas City, Mo. Thu. 2-4-56

NEW YORK — (ANP) — Top officials of the NAACP are expected to meet here within a week to consider the resignation of Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt from the organization's board of directors.

Mrs. Roosevelt, in a recent letter to NAACP Board Chairman Channing H. Tobias, announced that she was quitting the civil rights group because she was too busy with other matters to attend the monthly meetings.

However, a widely circulated rumor says the real reason for her quitting is anger over a speech made by Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, who two weeks ago told a Chicago audience that it might become necessary for Negroes to quit the Democratic party and vote Republican in 1956.

Henry Lee Moon, public relations director of the association, said Mrs. Roosevelt and Wilkins were scheduled to meet and discuss reconsideration of her resignation.

Once before — during the 1940's — Mrs. Roosevelt offered her resignation, but withdrew it after a conference with the late Walter White and other leaders of the NAACP.

Within the last year, she reportedly has become quite critical of the association's handling of civil rights matters and pending legislation before the Congress.

Her eldest son, Rep. James Roosevelt (R.-Calif.), has publicly criticized Clarence Mitchell, director of the NAACP's Washington Bureau, for his method of prompting action on civil rights legislation.

NEW YORK — Mrs Eleanor Roosevelt has sent in her resignation from the Board of Directors of the NAACP stating that she was too busy with other matters to attend the monthly board meetings, and was very tired.

Rumors, however, are that Mrs Roosevelt and NAACP heads are at odds over policy. It is rumored that she is resigning in anger with Roy Wilkins, NAACP executive secretary, over his Chicago speech which suggested it might become necessary for Negroes to leave the Democratic Party for the Republican Party.

Mrs Roosevelt offered her resignation once before, but was talked out of resigning by the late Walter White who was the executive secretary of the NAACP at the time, and by other top officials of the organization.

It is also reported that, lately Mrs Roosevelt has become critical of the NAACP's handling of civil rights matters.

Representative James Roosevelt, her eldest son, who has been pushing civil rights legislation has reportedly feuded with Clarence Mitchell, NAACP W. Bureau Director.

Mrs. Roosevelt likes Stevenson on civil rights

Adlai Stevenson is best for the nation and best for those concerned with civil rights, Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt told Stevenson supporters at a rally at the Elks Auditorium Monday night.

MRS. ROOSEVELT

The meeting climaxed activity by a Negro community Stevenson For President committee, headed by Assemblyman Augustus F. Hawkins who predicted, "that Stevenson will poll an overwhelming majority of votes of Negroes in the June 5 primary."

Mrs. Roosevelt rested her case on Stevenson's record during his term as governor of Illinois and what she called his forthright stand on the issues of the day."

"That means to me that you accept what is the law of the land."

When ex - President Truman endorsed the candidacy of Gov. Averell Harriman, Mrs. Roosevelt said, he probably had in mind that stalemate might arise "and his state has a favorite son."

She was referring to Sen. Stuart Symington of Missouri.

First Use of A-Bomb Defended

BY ELEANOR ROOSEVELT.

I was surprised to see an article from the Pilot, an official publication of the Catholic Archdiocese of Boston reprinted in large quantities and sent out by the American Friends Service Committee of Cambridge, Mass., entitled, "I Confess."

Eleanor Roosevelt

The article was reprinted with the permission of the editor of the Pilot, America's oldest Catholic weekly newspaper, and, therefore, editorial boards of both the newspaper and the Friends Service Committee seem to have approved it.

It was written some time ago marking the anniversary, Aug. 6, of the day 10 years before when we dropped the first atomic bomb on the city of Hiroshima, Japan.

The purpose of the article is to say that the American people and their leaders who were responsible for dropping the bomb in Hiroshima, and on Nagasaki three days later, should have confessed their "guilt" long ago.

It goes on to say that the people of Asia feel that much of the aid we have given them since that time came from a feeling of guilt, but that until we confessed this guilt, nothing would be of any avail.

I would like to review the circumstances which led up to this first use of the atomic bomb.

Our military people were almost ready for the last stage of the war, which was the actual attack on Japan. They had counted the costs such an attack would have involved—at least a million lives of American soldiers in addition to complete destruction of as much of Japan as would have been defended. This would have meant cities, towns, villages, men, women and children, for modern war is no longer a war between soldiers, it is a war between peoples.

Because of the plea of one in the historically beautiful cities in Japan, Kyoto and Narathese. These, of course, would have had to be destroyed.

All of these facts were presented to the President. In addition, he was told that one bomb would not be sufficient. Two, in quick succession, were our only hope of bringing about complete and rapid surrender. The reason for this was that we had people who had seen the defenses in Japan and they reported that these were so strong it was not believed possible for any army to penetrate to the interior.

* * *

So the only possible chance was to deal the Japanese such tremendous blows that they would realize that if they wanted to save themselves from complete destruction, they must surrender at once.

I think everyone in this country should have a horror of the conditions which brought about the need for using the atomic bomb. They should have grief and pity for the people affected and do all in their power to help the innocent who suffer.

But if you had to make this decision, I do not think any decision could have been made other than the one that was made. Leaflets were dropped over Hiroshima before the attack, warning the people to leave the city, and the same thing was done at Nagasaki. But it is human nature to stay where you are and not believe the worst until it happens.

I would not confess guilt for the American people or their leaders, only pity and a deep desire to aid those who suffered through no fault or their own and certainly through no fault of the Amercan people and their leaders.

Mrs. FDR Explains Adlai's 'Moderation'

CHICAGO (NNPA) — Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt Sunday sought to boost the Candidacy for Adlai E. Stevenson for the Democratic presidential nomination by explaining his stand for gradualism in carrying out the Supreme Court decision against segregated public schools.

At her press conference in the Boulevard Room of the Conrad Hilton Hotel, Mrs. Roosevelt defended Mr. Stevenson against charges that he stood for both moderation and gradualism in the field of civil rights.

People seemed to have tagged the word "moderation" as a bad word, the widow of the lage President Franklin D. Roosevelt said.

She said she understood the feeling of some colored leaders who think that moderation means doing nothing — that "you will stand still and not move forward."

* * *

BUT SHE DEFINED moderation as a "wise word." "I would be very sorry if, in our public life, we did not have moderation," she said, "because we would find ourselves in a great deal of trouble very quickly in many ways.

"What moderation really means," she said, "is that you face all the realities of a situation, you study your situation, you analyze it.

"Very few people take the trouble to do that, but if you are going to really be wise, you will do that with the problems of the day, and then you decide, when you know what you have got to do."

A reporter later asked Mrs. Roosevelt to comment upon the criticism of Mr. Stevenson by colored people that he favors gradual compliance with the desegregation decision.

She replied:

* * *

WELL, GRADUALISM has become, for the colored people what a red flag is to a bull almost, and it is a little bit like moderation.

"I think what has troubled many of the colored leaders even more than their fear that this might be a gradual approach is that whenever southern leaders seem satisfied, they were afraid that meant that there would be some understanding which they didn't know about, which meant that things would not move.

"Now, I think if they knew Mr. Stevenson at all, they would know, and they must now know, that he believes you have to uphold the law of the land and I think that colored leaders are wise enough to know that you cannot do things which are unwise.

"You can't move so fast that you try to change mores faster than people can accept it. That doesn't mean you do nothing, but it means that you do the things that need to be done, according to priority.

* * *

"I HAVE explained many times to groups all over this country that we in the North, before we can comply — now, this goes for Chicago, as well as New York, Detroit and other big cities — we in the North have a step to take before we can comply with the Supreme Court order of desegregation in the schools and it is not going to be easy, but we have only one step, and that is, we have to desegregate housing.

"You can say that you will desegregate schools by transporting children several miles in buses every day. It won't stick because it isn't the natural thing to do and mothers don't like to have their children transported way away from home.

"But what has to be done is that we have to desegregate housing and, if the North doesn't do that and doesn't give example to the South, the first step that the South has to take is to give its citizens the right to vote without fear.

"THAT IS A Federal right and the Federal Government can do something about that and then all the other steps follow.

"But the colored leaders know just as well as I know it and just as well as any thinking person in this country knows it.

"I want to move forward. I want to move forward with wisdom and as fast as we possibly can because it is no longer a domestic issue. It affect our leadership in the world.

"But for the colored people to think that because they have tagged a word, and it has been used once in a way that made them suspicious, that they cannot trust the person who would have to carry out the law of the land, I think is a sign that the colored leaders are not thinking very carefully through to the end of what they really want for the country.

"THEY ARE part of the country. They will get what they want and prosper as wisdom of leadership is shown for the whole country and not for any particular group alone."

Mrs. Rosevelt said she would be satisfied with a civil rights plank in the Democratic platform that did not specifically endorse the Supreme Court decision.

"I do not think it is necessary to say a specific thing when you have said quite clearly that you accept the law of the land," she said.

Committee goes ahead—

Mrs. Roosevelt calls for rights plank suitable to South and North

CHICAGO, Aug. 13 —(AP)— Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt was disclosed today to have added her voice to those urging Democratic convention plank acceptable to both North and South.

The widow of the former president, backing Adlai E. Stevenson for the party's presidential nomination, made an unscheduled half-hour visit last night before the 16-member drafting group now hammering out a preliminary draft of the 1956 platform.

It was not a public session, but newsmen outside heard delegates applaud her talk.

ONE OF THEM said later she had expresed "hope there would be no civil rights plank that would be unacceptable to any delegates."

That presumably would mean the statement of party aims would not include any reference to the Supreme Court decision banning racial segregation in public schools.

Stevenson has said the platform should contain an "unequivocal approval" of the decision, although also saying it seems strange the platform should be expected to endorse what is the law of the land.

Mrs. Roosevelt declined to say what she had told the platform drafting subcommittee. Asked the reason for the applause, she told reporters: "I don't think it's anybody's business but the committee's."

Rep. John W. McCormack of Massachusetts, chairman of the resolution committee and of the drafting group, said only she had made a general reference to civil rights. His group has not yet tackled the wording of that plank.

McCORMACK SAID Former President Truman had arranged for Mrs. Roosevelt to appear before the group after its formal hearings had ended. Truman is backing New York Gov. Averell Hirriman for the presidential nomination.

McCormack kept the drafting group working past midnight and called them into session again today with word they would skip the initial convention sessions.

Two former Democratic administration officials now trying to unseat Republican senators gave the platform group advice on a new farm plank last night.

THEY WERE Claude Wickard, former secretary of agriculture who is opposing Sen. Homer Capehart (R., Ind.), and R. M. Evans, former administrator of New Deal farm programs from 1938 to 1942 who is trying to defeat Sen. Bourke B. Hickenlooper (R., Iowa).

Both said the Democrats should promise farmers 100 per cent of parity by a series of federal aids, including price supports at not less than 90 per cent. Parity is a price said to be fair to farmers in relation to their costs.

McCormack said he is considering making public major planks as his drafting group agrees upon them and before the 108-member resolutions committee passes upon them.

In past conventions the platform has not been made public until all of it has been completed and approved by the full committee.

Harmony on Civil Rights Seen Mrs. Roosevelt Aim

Visit to Platform Writers Believed Effort to Avert Battle Over Issue

By J. M. O'LEARY

STAR CONVENTION BUREAU, Chicago, Aug. 13.—Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt was reported today to be using her influence to try to avert a fight in the Democratic convention over the explosive civil rights issue.

The widow of the former President made a surprise visit last night to the room in the Blackstone Hotel in which a 16-member subcommittee was drafting the platform.

She declined to tell reporters what she discussed with the platform drafters, but from another source it was reported she told them the important thing is the solidarity of the Democratic Party.

But, while Mrs. Roosevelt was closeted with the drafting subcommittee, the advocates of a strong civil rights plank were busy in other parts of Chicago, serving notice that they will not be content with a compromise which fails to indorse the Supreme Court's school integration decision. The Southerners have insisted they cannot go along with a plank which makes any direct mention of that decision.

Reather in Leading Role

Walter P. Reuther, head of the UAW, was taking a leading role in urging the liberals to insist, not only on an indorsement of the Supreme Court's decision but steps to implement it.

Mr. Reuther was one of several advocates of a strong plank who addressed a mass meeting in the Morrison Hotel, arranged by the leadership conference on civil rights. Others who spoke were Senator Lehman of New York and Representative Diggs of Michigan.

Mr. Diggs declared that if the platform committee report does not contain a plank indorsing the Supreme Court ruling in the school cases, he will get the 10 signatures necessary to file a minority report.

Mr. Diggs is a member of the platform committee, and the filing of such a report would force a showdown on the floor of the convention Wednesday night. Southern leaders have said that if a minority report is filed by the liberals, they will file a second minority report, calling for a declaration in favor of local control of local institutions.

CIO Meeting Held

Mr. Reuther also called a meeting last night of CIO members from various State delegations and urged them to insist on a strong civil rights plank.

When the platform writers get to foreign policy, it is expected they will include a promise to send Israel defensive arms. Representative Celler of New York a member of the committee, said he hopes there will be such a plank.

Party leaders who are striving to avoid a floor fight are believed to be searching for words that would express a belief in the principle of equality of educational opportunity for all children, without referring to the Supreme Court by name.

But the drafting subcommittee itself has put aside this troublesome and difficult task until it has whipped into shape all of the other planks, on a score of foreign and domestic issues.

The committee was locked in the drafting room until after midnight, and reconvened at 10 o'clock this morning. It may be tomorrow before they reach the civil rights issue.

When they adjourned early this morning they had finished planks dealing with social security, other welfare programs, and the problems of small business.

Working on Farm Plank

They were working today on the farm plank, and still had the important subject of foreign policy to take up.

The Democrats believe they have a good chance this year of corralling many of the farmers and small business men who went for Eisenhower four years ago, and are reported to have shaped aluring plans for these two groups.

The farm plank is expected to recommend a series of programs which, taken together, would seek to give the farmer 100 per cent of parity. This would start with a promise to return to price supports at 90 per cent, coupled with direct Government purchase of crops and other aids designed to reach the level of full parity.

After Mrs. Roosevelt had left the platform committee meeting, the chairman, Representative McCormick of Massachusetts, told reporters that she had discussed civil rights "only in a general way." He said she also had told the committee of her trips overseas in the past few years.

But there were definite indications from other sources that she was working for a peaceful solution of the civil rights controversy in the interest of party harmony.

Phone Call From Truman

Mr. McCormack said he received a telephone call early in the evening from former President Truman, who told him Mrs. Roosevelt was in the hotel, and suggested she be invited to appear.

Mrs. Roosevelt was in the committee room for 30 minutes, and twice during that time reporters in the hallway outside heard applause.

Meanwhile, Gov. Williams of Michigan, who has taken an active part in behalf of civil rights, was cautious in discussing the subject on his arrival here yesterday. He said he wanted to see the plank the committee has in mind before commenting on what he thinks the convention should do.

At her press conference yesterday afternoon, Mrs. Roosevelt was asked about reports that she would be content with a plank that did not specifically mention indorsement of the Supreme Court school decision.

"I am quite satisfied," she replied. "I do not think it is necessary to say a specific thing when you have said quite clearly that you accept the law of the land. That means to me that you accept what is the law of the land."

World's Best Loved Lady, Mrs. FDR Has Praise For Autherine And Bovcotters

Chicago, Ill.

Mrs. Franklin D. Roosevelt, certainly the world's best known woman, and one of the best loved, saluted Autherine Lucy and the Montgomery Improvement Association which is sponsoring the boycott of the Jim Crow city bus line.

In her syndicated column, the former first lady, commended Miss Lucy for her "dignity" and the Montgomery boycotters for adopting Gandhi's technique of non-violence.

Here, in her own words, is what she had to say last week:

I think everyone must be impressed by the dignity and calmness with which the boycott of the bus companies in Montgomery, Ala., has been carried on by the Negroes. Gandhi's theory of non-violence seems to have been learned very well.

I would also like to speak in praise of those white people in the South who have long fought for the rights of all their fellow citizens.

They are probably being made to suffer more than anyone in the North can imagine at the present time.

I am interested to find that there is even a group of University of Alabama students who want to know how they can restore sanity to their fellow students.

They do not regard with fear the admission to the undergraduate body of one young woman, and they deplore the methods used to keep her out.

I FEEL THAT Autherine Lucy has behaved with a great deal of dignity. She has apparently not enjoyed the publicity which the National Assn. for the Advancement of Colored People has thrust upon her; but she has acted with quiet dignity both in Washington and in New York, and her attitude gives one confidence that if she can be given a chance in the university she will act with wisdom and discretion.

I would like to see not one student but 10 admitted. Also, if there are others at the present time that the university is considering, it would be well to bring their consideration to a rapid close and accept these students, as well as to rescind the foolish refusal to permit this rather gentle and mild young woman from returning to the university.

THE SUPREME COURT RECOGNIZED that there must be local adjustment in certain states in desegregation of the schools. Good faith in moving forward was made subject to the courts, and the country must wait to see how this pregresses.

But there is nothing which prevents the administration in Washington from moving at once in the area of protection for all citizens who desire to vote.

In many states, this can be done now only by paying a poll tax. That in itself may make voting difficult in some cases and really requires two campaigns: (1) To get people to pay their tax, and (2) actually to get them to the polls.

No matter how many promises the NAACP wishes to extract from candidates at the present time, nothing can be achieved of real value for the coming 10 months except by the Republican Party and the Republican administration, since they are now in power.

Anti-Desegregation Manifesto Seems Like a Shocking Document

World-Telegram & Sun Sat. 3-17-56

New York, N.Y.

I was interested to see that the liberals in Congress reacted with some shock to the manifesto against desegregation by Southern Senators and Representatives. I understand that the document was toned down considerably. But even as it stands it seems to me a shocking document. It also points up a letter that came to me the other day and which I quote—

Eleanor Roosevelt

"It frightens me terribly to think that my sons, aged 10 and 12 years, will soon learn that our Constitution is their safeguard because they are white but does not protect the young Negro boy across town because he is of another race.

"How am I to explain this discrepancy to them when among my closest friends are two Negro couples, an Hawaiian family, Italians, Mexicans and Jewish folk besides Catholics, Protestants, etc.?

What to Answer?

"What am I to answer when they now accept all people as equals and later find out they are different and are not accepted all over this country?

"How can they go into military service willingly with the knowledge that sometime they might be called upon to fight for the principles they were taught to revere, if they find out, and find out they must, that freedom is a some time thing?

"I am afraid they will grow bitter and resentful and wonder if it pays to be a good citizen."

This is one woman's reaction. It might well represent the reaction of great numbers of people in this country, for we are a country made up of many races. And of necessity in many parts of the country we do have friends of many races.

Great Difficulties.

Increasingly as the world grows smaller through rapid communication and transportation, we acquire friends of many colors.

None of us in the North who recognize how far from perfect racial integration is in our area has any right to minimize the great difficulties faced by the Southern states, where one particular race is predominant and a color barrier was set up by the original pattern of slavery.

The problem is very, very difficult and will require the position which the President has taken—a slow, steady enforcement of the law.

Our Constitution is interpreted by the Supreme Court. And the law as defined by the Supreme Court and enacted at every level of government is made by men.

Public Conscience.

Yet we always have felt in this country that, once men are placed in positions of responsibility as judges, they act to the best of their ability with integrity and fairness, reflecting the state of public conscience as nearly as possible.

At the present time I think the public conscience is reflected by the Supreme Court's interpretation of the Constitution. The great majority of the states look upon segregation as discrimination.

And those few states that have a special problem in this respect will in a variety of ways slowly have to solve their problem and accept the will of the majority.

Mrs. Roosevelt speaks Mon. for Stevenson

Inlaue p. 5

Los Angeles Calif.

Former "First Lady", Mrs. Eleanor Roosevelt, will tell why she is for Adlai Stevenson at a meeting at the Elks hall, 4016 S. Central, Monday at 7:30 p.m.

The meeting, climaxing Stevenson's drive for votes in the June 5 primary, will be held under the auspices of a Citizens Committee, headed by Assemblyman Augustus F. Hawkins. Stevenson will be present to hear Mrs. Roosevelt back his candidacy. Councilman Ed Roybal is co-chairman of the committee.

Also on hand will be Congressman Jimmy Roosevelt who will introduce his mother and add his own endorsement.

There will be no admission charged for the affair. "We hope the voters will seize this opportunity to hear a full discussion of the issues in the campaign," Hawkins said. He promised that Stevenson will make a major address with particular emphasis on civil rights issues.

Hawkins said a survey of the Oregon vote reveals that Stevenson captured the votes of Negroes in that state.

The Stevenson committee this week issued a survey of Stevenson's record as governor of Illinois, which showed that the candidate had acted against segregated schools in 13 Illinois counties when he was elected in 1948. By the end of his term, all school segregation had been terminated in the state and teachers, as well as school children, had been thoroughly integrated, his supporters said.

Shortly after his election, Stevenson also ordered "no racial segregation" in the national guard, "nor shall there be any discrimination is accepting enlistments" in the armed forces, he said.

"Racial tags were eliminated from public records, and concessionaires in state public parks were ordered to end all discrimination or lose their contracts with the state," it was alleged by Hawkins.

Drive for state fair employment laws was beaten in the Illinois Senate although Stevenson's supported it, Hawkins said.

Stevenson called out the State Militia when a race riot developed in Cicero in protest against a Negro family moving into that city.

Stevenson recently scored President Eisenhower for "inactivity" and said that in the event of his election he would throw the weight of the Presidency behind the Supreme Court's civil rights decisions.

"The civil rights of all citizens must be protected," Stevenson said last week. "Discrimination in any form on account of race, religion or nationality is repugnant to our ideals of liberty and justice."

Magazine Twists Old Race Angle

From The Mobile Press

Saturday Evening Post started out to tell the story in its June 16 issue about Citronelle's oil strike, but the writer, following a familiar pattern, buried the central theme in a strenuous effort to disclose racial discrimination in lease dealings.

The story is titled "The Day It Rained Money," and is copiously illustrated. One picture shows a Negro man standing in front of his shack with a shotgun in hand. He is quoted in the caption as saying: "I'm not going to let any title busters get my land."

The casual reader would conclude from this that Citronelle had a virtual race riot—not an oil strike.

The pictures carry symbols familiar in print, but fast-fading from the Southern scene—a Negro riding in a mule-drawn wagon and the ramshackled cabin. These, of course, were calculated to attract South-hating readers.

Everyone will admit that when oil was found at Citronelle there was a flurry of excitement and some rather sharp conflicts over land and mineral rights. Even the Post's writer — Harold Martin — admitted that many of these clashes were between white people.

But obviously, the Post's editor, in planning for the story, assumed there would be the natural keen competition for the land and leases. Apparently they saw in the situation a wonderful opportunity to further smear the South with the charge of racial discrimination. Thus they sent a writer to the scene.

The now ancient formula used in the story and art layout is worn threadbare. The magazine had the elements of an interesting and significant story about one of the nation's finest communities. But these elements were lost when the old race twist was applied to the story.

Southern School Integration by 1964 Seen by Negro Lawyer

ATLANTA—It isn't easy to see inside a Southern Negro's heart. He doesn't want you to look.

I wanted to look into one heart. To do this, I had to find a Negro who was unafraid. A cab spun between the downtown skyscrapers of Atlanta across Peachtree st. and up Butler st., to a small structure marked Walden Building. On the second floor, in suite 200, is a stout elderly man who shows gold caps when he smiles.

Jim Bishop

Washington, D.C.

This is Austin T. Walden, Negro lawyer, Negro politician, a member of the National Legal Committee of the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People. This is a man who stands in well with Negroes and with Whites. As a ranking member of NAACP, he is also the voice of the organization which fought for desegregation up to the Supreme Court, and won it.

HE CHEWS gum. He smiles all the time and the bridge of his nose is bent back so that he looks faintly like the old-time prize fighter, Joe Gans. He is 70, and he has been practicing law 44 years. He attended school in Fort Riley, Ga., and in Atlanta and at the University of Michigan. He is a shrewd man and he blinks his eyes rapidly when he is thinking hard, which is most of the time. Sometimes, when he needs a little longer to think, he buzzes for Mrs. Lovelace, his secretary, and he talks about a letter which has to go out.

"Integration will be complete in six to eight years," he says in a voice that is soft and sweet as wet sugar. "I wouldn't say that all of my people are ready for integration now, but the children of both races will be in a common school by 1962 or 1964." His jaws pause over the gum. "I mean Mississippi too.

"We've got a lot of work ahead. Our children must be taught to be twice as mannerly as white children to make this thing work. In the early tryout period, the need for infinite patience is going to be on our side."

The morning sun came through the blinds and threw yellow strips across his milk chocolate skin. "So far, we have made no progress here. Negro parents in maybe six cities have petitioned for admission of children to white schools. All that has happened is that committees have been appointed by boards of education to investigate the matter."

THE EYES BLINK. "It's stalling. Sure it's stalling, but the way you make progress in the South is by moving slowly. Sometimes the other side makes mistakes and these mistakes help us. For instance, when the Federal Court says we must have integration in our schools, we cannot go back to that court until we have exhausted all administrative means of integrating. This takes a long time. But down in Valdosta, they made a mistake.

"There the Board of Education appointed a committee to investigate integration, and the committee began to do a serious job—an honest job. At once, the State of Georgia sued out a restraining order to prevent Valdosta from doing any such thing. We of the NAACP were glad to hear this because now we will try to make ourselves parti-defendants in this action and, in that way, we will leapfrog all the time-wasting maneuvers. We will get back to Federal Court quicker than we had a right to expect."

What about the charges of communism against the NAACP? This brings on the smile. On the desk, the thumbs rub in circles rapidly.

"NAACP IS 47 YEARS OLD," Walden says. "It is opposed to communism because Negroes are a little bit more religious than most other folks and they are opposed to anyone who is opposed to God. Oh, we may have had a few Communists in the ranks. I don't know. Maybe. But if so, they couldn't get far with the members."

The Attorney General of the State of Georgia, Eugene Cook, says that the real goal of NAACP is racial intermarriage. What about it?

"It's absurd. Nothing is farther from the aims of NAACP. I will admit that we are opposed to laws which forbid marriage between the races, but the reason for that is because such laws give the stronger race an opportunity to prey on the women of the weaker race.

"A long time ago, 30 years, I guess, I was defending a case in court and the prosecutor felt that he was losing and so he stood up in court and walked over to the jury box and wagged his finger at me. 'I do believe,' he said, 'that he believes in intermarriage.' This was supposed to inflame the white jury against my client. So, when he got finished, I stood up and I said: 'Marriage, gentlemen, is a two-way proposition. I could not marry a white woman unless she wanted to marry me and I don't know any so disposed. One more thing: If I can't marry a woman unless she wants to marry me, then neither can you.'"

THE JURY SLAPPED its thighs laughing. Austin Walden's client was acquitted. The moral would appear to be that, in the matter of interracial marriage, the white women will be the controlling factor and, as long as they remain on their own side of the color fence, no one need worry about the ambitions of the Negro male. The key is held by Southern white womanhood.

Even Walden, as a highly placed member of NAACP, does not claim that the organization represents a majority of the Negroes of the South. The total membership of NAACP is down from a high of above a half million to about 400,000. Of these, about 20,000 are white people. In sum, NAACP represents almost 4 percent of the Negroes of the South, a small and articulate group.

Atlanta has a few Negro policemen, and Walden wanted to show how well integration works on the law-enforcement level. He got into his hydramatic automobile, and drove Burris Jenkins and me to police headquarters. There, we waited outside an office for a few minutes, and met Chief Herbert T. Jenkins, one of the handsomest men in the South.

THE CHIEF said that there are now 10 Negroes on the force. Six Negro women are in uniform. "We had people in this department who were determined to see that Negro policemen failed," the chief said. "I was just as determined to see that they would not. So I took personal charge of them myself. They have worked out well and I never get tired of saying it. Two of them showed exceptional merit and I promoted them to detectives without tests."

The one Negro on duty at the time was Claude E. Mundy, 36, a good-looking man with a pencil-streak mustache who has had two years of college and has five children by two wives. He is the jailer on the third floor of A[illegible]ta prison. Sometimes he pa[illegible]ts on foot. When he is off duty, he sits with his shoes off and watches "Dragnet." That's his favorite on TV.

His pay is $318 a month and he works on the side as an automobile mechanic. He's been on the force only five years, but he's already bucking for a pension. "When I get that pension," he says, looking off beyond the three Negro prisoners who stand behind him holding only to bars and listening, "I think I'll open a little filling station or something. A little garage maybe."

WALDEN nods approvingly. Mundy has made the right answers. When you ask the cop about desegregation, the far-off look leaves his eyes and he looks to Walden for help. The policeman has no opinion about desegregation, even though it is now the law of the land and he has sworn to uphold the law.

We go back downstairs and the chief walks by, on his way out. He says a word of farewell, and Austin Walden smiles obsequiously and bows his woolly head and giggles a faint reply. He is now a Negro in the white man's company.

Have we peeked into a Negro heart? Maybe. But if so, it was an awfully fast peek.

Thunder Over Dixie

Champion of Justice For Negroes Opposed To Integration in Schools

Philadelphia, Pa.

Desegregation is the South's greatest crisis since the end of slavery.

The true story of what is happening in Dixie is now told for the first time by Jim Bishop, author of the best-selling historical chronicle, "The Day Lincoln Was Shot." This is the second article in an exclusive series.

By JIM BISHOP

LEXINGTON, Miss.

THE TOWN is quiet. Very quiet. Standing under an awning, you can hear the hiss of rain and watch it char the big bare oaks. It makes little starry splashes on the white dome of Holmes County Courthouse. It spanks a horse who lowers his head and pulls a farm wagon around the perimeter of the square and down a short hill toward Route 17. It picks up the mud in front of the old one-story shops and boils down the gutter as cocoa.

Negroes, lounging in doorways, watch you slam the door of your car and they know that you do not belong here and they know that anyone who does not belong here is not welcome in this little place of knotted hatred. Their jaws slack and their eyes swing like sights on a moving target as you walk up the hill. They do not talk. They watch. You have a feeling that you are on a movie set called "High Noon."

You walk up toward a building marked "Est. 1837" and you turn in a double door and, without looking back, you can feel the distorted faces behind the rainy windows across the street.

A short, intelligent looking man stares at you and you turn right and go into a small office. This is the Lexington Advertiser and Durant News, circ. 2600 once a week.

BEHIND the desk sits what is left of a fearless press. The editor has brown wavy hair, china blue eyes which can ream a pine board at 20 paces, a big, full-figured woman who has hit hard in the fight of racial justice, and who has been hit hard in turn. This is Hazel Brannen Smith who, at 41, is beginning to wonder if it isn't better to stop weeping in public every time a Negro is beaten or shot, and in that way protect her stake in the community: two newspapers, a Cadillac at the curb, a picture-window home in the hills, two Irish setters who love everybody and are color blind.

"Oh, no," Mrs. Smith says, holding up both hands. "I'm not talking any more. I'm done finished talking." She points to the short man in the doorway. "My husband was superintendent of the hospital. They fired him. They boycotted my papers. The advertising fell down to nothing. We had to go west until things quieted down here." She speaks a sweet Mississippi drawl. "You know what, mister? I don't even know if we can stay here."

You know what? She will not sell those two little papers. They are the only newspapers in Holmes County and they give Mrs. Smith a loud voice in civic affairs. This country is the deepest of the Deep South and the people grind their teeth when they read some of her editorials, but they read them or read nothing.

HOLMES county statistics make you hold the long breath: whites, 9600; Negroes, 26,000. The white Citizens Council looks at these numbers in fright, and some brand Hazel Smith a "Negrophile." The Citizens Council is wrong. Mrs. Smith will fight for anyone who has been wronged. The color doesn't matter. The church doesn't matter. The politics are of no consequence. Mrs. Smith has principles, and a congenital inability to keep her typewriter shut.

If her interests are centered on the uplifting of the Negro, she shows it in strange ways. She is opposed to school desegregation. Colored children, she says bluntly, should have their own schools. "Put them together in one school," she says with a mark-my-words index finger, "and it is going to be bad for the Negro children and the white children.

Inquirer

"Can't you understand that the Negro children are not ready for this? Can't you understand it? They hate school. They have no culture at home, no encouragement. A colored boy in the seventh grade is struggling with work that a white boy in the fourth grade has mastered. Forget color for a moment. Is it right for two-thirds of a class to hold back one-third? Well, that's what is going to happen. It's just so plain. In this country you'll have two-thirds Negroes in the class and one-third whites."

Mon. 3-19-56

SHE CARESSES the typewriter with lacquered fingers. "I'm finished talking. Go talk to the Negro fathers and mothers. Ask them if they want their children to go to white schools. Just ask. And if you find any, come back and tell me."

P. 9

You say thanks and you walk out. "Come back at five, hear?" she says. "We'll go up to my place. Got to find something in a dry state like Mississippi:"

The Welcome Inn is a little fly-specked beanery. It faces the courthouse and it is for whites only. You shake the rain from your hat and the faces in the Welcome Inn freeze in varying stages of mobility. Conversation dies as though someone had lifted the needle from the record. You sit at a little white table and you have a hamburger or a bowl of chili or some cold ham. You order a cup of tea and you look up. Back in the kitchen, a Negro girl in a too-tight sweater stares at you from a square window. The men customers—four of them—select toothpicks on their way out. The word is getting around that a Northerner is in town.

The statistics in the notebook tell you nothing about tension. Except that Americans are tough on minority peoples. Not long ago, the plains teemed with Indians. Now there are 343,000 of them and 168,000,000 of us. The slums used to kill off the city Negroes with a silent pistol — tuberculosis. Now they are getting better housing and the antibiotics keep them alive as well as the white men. So the Negro numbers 16,250,000 in 1956. He's now 9 percent of our population.

There are more Negroes in the South than in the North. About two to one. To take a look at the extremes, there are 1,000,000 Negroes in Alabama and fewer than 500 in Vermont. In South Carolina, there are 900,000 this year and, in North Dakota, 275. In Texas the count is about 1,000,000 and, in Montana, 1000. Here in Mississippi there are 1,100,000 Negroes and 1,300,000 whites.

* * *

THE PROBLEM has many faces. Of the 10,500,000 Negroes in the South, 3,360,000 are boys and girls of school age. The Supreme Court of the United States says that these children—a little less than the total population of Chicago—must be integrated with white children in white schools within a reasonable time. What is a reasonable time? The problem required 200 years of slavery and abuse to flower. How long to cure it? Five years? More than that, because the white South is dragging its feet. Ten? Maybe. But the guess down here is 15 for full integration.

The first example of desegregation that this reporter knows of occurred in 1859 or thereabouts. It was practiced by the master of the Custis Mansion at Arlington, Va. There, Gen. Robert E. Lee set a ground floor room aside for "tutoring." In that room, his children learned their reading, writing and arithmetic, and so too did the children of the slaves.

Now the great-grandsons of the white masters are caught in a dark riptide, and the great-grandsons of the slaves have learned to add and they find that they number 25 percent of the population. Twenty-five percent of anything represents a strong balance of power. The white man gets on his knees and says: "Whatever you do, keep them from voting." In many states, the Negro does not vote because of intimidation. It's becoming harder to intimidate him. When he gets the vote (which is bound to follow desegregation in the 100-year climb toward full freedom) the white politician will truckle to the voting strength of the Negro. And, when that happens, it may be the white man who will begin to leave the South.

At 5 P. M. the rain had stopped and I sat before the snap and sparkle and hickory smell of the Smith fireplace. The Irish setters, both wet, were careful to sit only on the scatter rugs, not on the cold stone floor. Mrs. Smith found something warm. Hazel Smith sat with crossed legs, swinging one, telling of how much trouble she got into for reporting that a sheriff had shot a Negro boy in the back. She talked a little about Yazoo City, over a dozen hills to the southwest, where 53 Negro families signed a petition to have their children admitted to white schools. When last heard from, only two of those families still resided in Yazoo City. There are some people here who insist that pressure of one kind or another has forced 400,000 Negroes to leave Mississippi in the last 15 years.

IN HOLMES county, no one takes a stand for desegregation. There is a synagogue which ministers to the spiritual needs of 35 or 40 Jewish families. There is a tiny Catholic Church and a priest comes in from Vicksburg every Sunday for mass. No one takes a stand, and one is left with the feeling that God made all people equal, but some a little more equal than others.

Silence is also a weapon in this state. When Negroes feel that they have been treated unjustly, they quit talking. If they work for white men, they do what the white man tells them, but they say nothing.

Whole villages and towns of Negroes become mute. This ticks on, day ofter way, until white men can no longer stand it and they scream: "For God's sake, man! What's eating you!"

What, then is an injustice? Last year a white man was found guilty of attacking a Negro girl. At almost the same time, a Negro was found guilty of attacking a white woman. The Negro was sentenced to die; the white man drew two years.

It was time to leave the home of Hazel Smith. The fireplace was getting cold and the ice was getting warm. We were talking about the figures given to me by Jackson M. Tubb, State Superintendent of Public Education. Some were surprising. Mississippi controls 2630 school buildings. Of these, 872 are for white students, 1858 are for Negroes. In all, 442,691 students are enrolled in these schools; 182,210 attend white elementary schools; 179,937 go to Negro schools. Approximately one of each three white children goes on to high school; one of each six Negroes attends high school. The State budget is $49,000,000.00. Federal aid is only $943,203.12.

THE NIGHT was clear. I went back to the Welcome Inn to jot some notes. The tea was lukewarm. An elderly woman asked if I would like some cookies. I shook my head. The front door slammed. I looked up. A fat sheriff came in. He walked to the counter and he was looking at me all the way. He wore a shirt and he carried a loose gun. He sat down at the counter and turned his back to it and faced me. His hands gripped his knees. I tried not to watch. The door slammed again. I looked up. A thinner officer came in. He carried a blackjack in his back pocket. He sat next to the first man, turned his back to the counter, and leaned his elbows on it. He said nothing to the first man. They sat and looked at me.

I took my time finishing the tea. I dropped a quarter on the white marble table and folded my notes. I walked out and closed the door quietly. The car was angle-parked a block away. The square was deserted. Between the bare branches of the trees, the stars winked wisely.

At the curb, I looked back. The thin officer was 100 feet behind me with a flashlight. He was looking in store windows. When I backed out, he turned to watch. It was a 60-mile run back to Jackson.

Some Alabama Whites Say 'Someday, Maybe But Not Now, Not Yet'

Fourth of a Series

By JIM BISHOP

BIRMINGHAM, Ala.

THE old Nash staggered through the road holes in Tuxedo Junction and the yellow headlights bucked the walls of the Negro shanties.

"You want to see a Negro district," the cop said. "This is one."

In the cold starry night, the unpainted houses leaned against each other like frightened ghosts.

I've seen stronger looking doghouses.

A thin man slouched beside the cop on the front seat — Edward Strickland. He covers his baldness with good gray hats. A few years ago he exposed the viciousness of Alabama politics in a book called Phenix City, but he is first of all a reporter. A good reporter. He has been covering the Negro district of Birmingham for 14 years.

The policeman was another Eddie—Edward L. Quinn, a big crew cut who works the Negro district out of the detective bureau. In conversation, he sounds as solicitous as a bridegroom. But the words are hard and the sympathies have been blunted by years of cop callousness.

Who knows a city better than a policeman and a reporter? Who? The mayor? A preacher? A bellhop or a sociologist? Not on your life. A reporter and a policeman have to know the city down to its sox, and neither one is paid for finding anything good about it.

THE car bounced through Titusville and on up the steep little hill where the rich Negroes live in their modern ranch homes with the matching Cadillacs in the driveway and are waited on by Negro servants from down in Tuxedo Junction. It's a realistic world, this one.

Children play in front of the houses of prostitution only in daylight hours. After dark, they are indoors, eating or studying or sleeping—three and four to a bed in drafty rooms separated from other rooms by a faded cotton curtain. By sight and sound, they learn much more at home than they do at school.

We stopped in at Big Mike's place. This is a coffee house for Whites Only. All public places are marked "White Only" or "Colored Only" and, in some towns, a white man can be fined $25 for ordering something in a restaurant for Negroes. The Negro never makes the opposite mistake unless he is badly drunk and belligerent.

Birmingham is the newest of the Southern cities—82 years old. It was born out of a mountain of iron ore and it spreads out in neat squares across two valleys. Now 360,000 people call it home, and 210,000 of them are dark of skin. There are rich whites and rich Negroes and poor whites and poor Negroes. As befits a big Southern city, Birmingham has its White Citizens Council, whose purpose is to frighten the Negro into remaining exactly where he is.

But, in Birmingham, of all the Southern cities, the Citizens Council has not been sufficient to give the white man peace of mind. He needs something stronger. So, last month, for the first time in years, Ku-Klux Klan pamphlets were dropped on all white front porches. The literature was the same as in 1865 — anti-Catholic, anti-Jewish, anti-Negro.

Birmingham is in a mood to read.

* * *

DETECTIVE QUINN stirred his black coffee slowly and said that the trouble was that the North does not understand Negroes, and the South does. "In Birmingham," he said, "the Negro commits eight out of each 10 crimes. He requires the services of more than half the police department. He lives different. He thinks different.

"Take the Smithfield project," says Quinn. "That's exactly the same as the white housing projects, brick for brick, room for room. Take a look at any of the white ones, and then look at the Negro one. They throw garbage on the front lawn."

Quinn is a tough cop. He is also a Southerner. Strickland is a tough reporter. He is also a Southerner. The white man's code of supremecy comes easily to them. Quinn, for example, has a contempt so deeply ingrained that he does not know it exists. Once when we talked of Negro disorderly houses, he drawled: "Ah don't have to point them out to you folks. They are all disorderly houses and you can take a picture if you please and what can anybody say?" There are millions of men like Quinn in the South.

Strick hung his hat and sat.

"Wait a minute," he said. "Admit that the schools haven't given the Negro the educational, the cultural advantages he should have. The fact is that the law now says we have to give him these advantages quickly. OK. We'll admit we were wrong. But we still can't obey the law at once.

"The truth of the matter is that the Southern Negro is a sensual child. He wants only what pleases his several senses. There is a black belt in Alabama—it runs from Meridian, Miss., all the way to a spot 20 miles south of West Point, Ga.—and there the Negroes run from five to one to seven to one over the white man. You're white. How would you like to have a house down there? Try it awhile and then tell us about the law."

"It's just this, said Quinn. "We're not going to have integration in this generation. Sometime maybe. But not now. And, if you think I'm anti-Negro, go out to Scratch Ankle and ask the people about me. They know me as good as I know them. Ask them."

Strick chuckled. "Some of those Negroes want to run him for Public Safety Commissioner."

OFFICER QUINN is a Bible student. His best girl is his 5-year-old daughter, Kathy, a pale, pretty blonde who knows so much about Jesus that a big part of Birmingham thinks the youngster should be on the $64,000 Question.

"You know what the Negro wants?" the cop said.

"I'll tell you," said Strick. "I'll tell you what the Negro really wants. He wants good wages and fair treatment, that's what he wants. That's the extent of it. He doesn't want to go to your house and nothing embarrasses him more than to see you in his."

Quinn marveled at such succinct wisdom.

"I think I know the Negro as well as anybody and I don't know one yet who wants to be bothered with a white school. You never see our Parker High School? It's Negro. I don't know about now, but it used to be called the biggest in the country."

* * *

WE paid for the coffee and left a little tip and walked out into the night. To the south, we could see Red Mountain in the moonlight. It is full of dolomite and iron ore and coal and the three get along well in the same mountain and each maintains its integrity until all three get into the smelting furnaces across town. Then they come out shiny bars of steel.

Something is wrong. Terribly wrong. All the white evidence shows that the Negro is content, but all the daily news shows that he feels miserable. Some months ago Loza Parks sat in the front part of a Montgomery bus. Trouble started Negroes began to walk to work Since then, the ensuing boycott has almost wrecked the bus company. Some time ago, a girl named Autherine Lucy drove up to the University of Alabama in a limousine, stepped out in the height of fashion, and was shown to the head of the line of registering white students. There was a riot.

The Negro is content, they say. Then why is the State of Alabama planning to set up three separate school systems: white, Negro and mixed? And why is it (to look at the other side of the coin for a moment) that the Negro, if he wants to live with the whites, turns down the chance when it is offered?

For years, they say, the rich white families of Birmingham have offered good upstairs rooms to their maids and butlers, good furniture and a radio, the saving of 34 cents a day bus fare and many dollars in rent—and yet not one maid or butler in fifty will live with the white families, each one announcing in a whisper, with eyes downcast, that if madame doesn't mind we would prefer to go on living in the shacks of Tuxedo Junction.

Why? The Southern Negro, living in a white house, feels that he is in a plush strait jacket.

This is a problem with many faces. And it will not be solved tomorrow or next year. It is going to require a lot of time and a lot of patience.

"A fat sheriff came in . . . sat down back to the counter and faced me . . . another sat down next to the first . . . they looked at me. . . ."

Drawn by Burris Jenkins, Jr.

In the ironically named Tuxedo Junction section of Birmingham, Ala., live the Negroes who work as servants to other, richer Negroes in town.
